

Full returns of the Irish County and Rural District Council elections have now come to hand; and a more adequate conception can therefore be formed by the readers of the "True Witness" of the magnitude of the peaceful revolution which has been effected through these elections throughout the length and breadth of Ireland. Below we give the details by county, and in alphabetical order. Two grand lessons have been inculcated by the results of these elections—namely that Ireland is unalterably determined to secure a restoration of her native parliament in Dublin, and that she is resolved that factions individuals who have for the past few years been doing their best to spread disunion amongst the Nationalist ranks shall be driven from public life.

In the whole four provinces the Nationalists are in a majority. The fiercest battles took place, as was only to have been expected, in Ulster. Wherever Orangeism was rampant no quarter was shown Nationalist candidates whether Catholic or Protestant; and this circumstance constitutes a significant commentary upon the policy advocated by the leaders of the two nationalist factions and their two daily organs; that toleration should be shown by the people to the Unionist minority. As a Belfast Nationalist journal aptly puts it, "there is no room for toleration in the north." The result of the electoral struggle in the north is that 97 Nationalists and 83 "Unionists" are elected. In Munster, Leinster and Connaught, 447 Nationalists, and only 36 "Unionists" are elected. It is remarkable that in one Ulster county, Cavan, which was represented in Parliament by the late Mr. Joseph Biggar, not one "Unionist" candidate has been successful. In Donegal, only two "Unionists" are elected, against eighteen Nationalists, and a similar result is shown in Monaghan. In Tyrone there are ten Nationalists to nine anti-Nationalists.

The results of the elections are happy omens for the triumph of the cause of Home Rule; for while the proportion for Ireland's Parliamentary representatives in the British House of Commons, has for the past fifteen years been 4 Home Rulers, to one anti-Home Ruler, the political composition of the Urban and the County Councils is now 5 Home Rulers to one opponent of Home Rule.

"Landlordism in Ireland is a thing of the past, and home rule is inevitable."

This is the opinion of the Rev. S. C. Armstrong, Anglican clergyman of the parish of Templederry, County Tipperary, who has come out to Canada for the purpose of seeing if the North West would offer superior advantages for the settlement of his family. Mr. Armstrong himself has been a landlord upon a minor scale, and he is able to speak feelingly upon the subject of the agrarian evolution in Ireland, which appears to have reached in the triumph of the democracy its ultimate expression.

"Landlordism may be said to be a thing of the past in Ireland to-day," said Mr. Armstrong, to-day, at the Windsor street station, Montreal, in discussing the result of the recent elections held under the provisions of the Local Government Bill, which places the supreme power in the hands of the people.

"It may be said that the dual ownership of the soil has ceased in Ireland. Men not old can remember when it was almost high treason to talk of tenant right. Now that is about the only right acknowledged. Landlordism retires, and labor comes to the front. The elections mark the most wonderful triumph for the laborers' party. Even the regular Nationalists were cast aside, and untried men, taken from the humblest ranks of life, were placed in power. To the credit of all, be it said, the elections were conducted quietly, nor am I afraid that the democracy will abuse its power to any appreciable degree. But the elections proved the death-blow to landlordism. Nearly every representative of an ancient power and prestige was defeated. Untrained and untried men were brought to the front. Wealth, tradition, counted for nothing. I am not afraid of the situation, speaking for myself, nor do I dread the oncoming of Home Rule, which falls inevitably and logically from the operation of the new law. Home Rule will follow, and follow without violence. The Roman Catholics are in the great majority; they will be in power in Ireland before many years. That is to say, I clearly see a Parliament sitting in Dublin. Even old-time Conservatives who have cherished the English supremacy are beginning to see that it will be wisdom on their part to cast in their lot with the Nationalists. When the majority reach power in an independent Parliament, I am not afraid that it will abuse that power. I know the Roman Catholics of Ireland as well as any man living. I have travelled through every part of the country. The majority will always desire to rule; it will also most naturally favor those of its own way of thinking; but I am persuaded that the Protestants need have nothing to fear from a Home Rule Parliament. The latter will, to some extent, be directed by the Roman Catholic priests. That will be inevitable. But the talk of persecution of the minority is bugbear. The majority will, in the main, act fairly towards the minority. What is clearly seen by all classes in
