immediately after I heard the expression, but I asked that a transcript of his remarks be delivered to me in order that I might be sure I was not quoting the hon. member incorrectly. This expression was used at about twenty-five minutes to ten, and unfortunately the transcript is not available at this moment. I think this expression might be regarded as charging insincerity; and since the reference was to members of the legal profession who sit to my right they could easily be identified. If my remarks do not meet with serious objection, I do not suppose the hon. member would object to saying that that sentence should not be repeated.

Mr. Mitchell (London): Mr. Speaker, I shall co-operate in anything that you say, but I also did say that I was not imputing any false motives, and my reference to their talking with their tongues in their cheeks was not in connection with speeches that were made in this house but which were made elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker: I do not suppose we ought to carry on a discussion on the point, but I do have a recollection that a similar expression has been asked to be withdrawn and I want to make sure that this sentence is considered one which will not be used in future. See Debates, January 28, 1954.

On motion of Mr. Stanton the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: We shall continue this debate tomorrow.

Mr. Green: Can the minister tell us the business for Friday?

Mr. Harris: No.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.
