NEED SOLDIERS' VOTE

Legal Reasons, Too, Stand in the Way-Would Hurt Trade.

There ain't going to be no election!"
That is what a Conservative politician said to The World reporter last might, and it sized up the general consensus of opinion in this city, so far as The World man was able to glean it from conversations held with a number of men active in politics on both sides of the fence. At the Liberal headquarters it was declared that a general election would be impossible bequarters it was declared that a general election would be impossible before September, 1915, unless parliament amended the Elections Act at the coming session. This authority relied on a legal opinion to the effect that there were no valid election lists available for a Dominion election in the New Ontario ridings, and that no polling subdivisions for Dominion elec-

Would Waste Soldier Vote. An organizer gave a more practical reason for not bringing on the election at this time. He said:

"We have just sent some 32,000 voters out of the country, and they will shortly be followed by nearly as many more. To have an election, therefore, would disfranchise between 50.000 and 60.000 men, of whom perhaps 80 per cent. are Conservatives. Sir Robert Borden's popular majority in the last election did not much exceed 50,000. But what is more to the point is that the recruits are drawn from all over the country, and a great number of close ridings would be af-fected. In Manitoba, in 1911, the Conservative candidates in several ridings scratched in by a small majority, and there are a number of districts in On-tarlo and other provinces where the absence of 100 or 200 voters oversea would be decisive. North York, for example, furnished many men to the first contingent, of whom a large proportion voted for Armstrong in 1911. Col Currie, M.P., who had only 172 majority in 1911, took more than that number of recruits from North Simcoe. These would vote for him were they at home, but cannot vote for him while they are at the front. To throw away the soldier vote would be worse than

Can't Stand the Strain. A former member of parliament now resident in Toronto discussed the possibility of an immediate general election for the Dominion and said among other things:

"To hold an election now would only increase the war-strain under which every member of parliament lives. He

LONDON, Oct. 7.—After desperate fighting only nine miles from the Belgian border, French and British cavalry today defeated a large force of German cavalry which was striving to outflank the allies, it is declared in advices from the front. The mounted troops of both armies have been engaged in a mad drive for the past two days, one to reach the French-Belgian coast and the other to prevent it. The advantage gained today by the allies is said to give them a continuous line opposing the kaiser's armies from Malines to Noyon, and from Soissons eastward in the general direction of Metz.

General Von Kluk is still endeavoring to pierce the France-British lines, and last night repeated assaults were delivered at different points. Altho he continues to hold the advantage won on Monday, he has been unable to make any definite impression on the allied front. In fact, the fortified positions of both armies would seem to be almost impregnable, altho the German statement of today acknowledges a
