The Old Year.

Bless the old year! He's almost gone; I hear him in a dream moon.

"I'm weary—I'm lonely—I'm waiting,"

he said, "Will no one breathe a blessing on me?"

"Thou poor old man, with the snow-white hair,"

"I'll bless thee," said a lady fair: "For thou art young in youth still bring to me

My beautiful babe in its purity."

"Bless the old year!" the young man cried;

"In many a spring he brought me my bride."

"The richest gift to mortal given—Brought her from the gate of heaven!"

"Bless the old year!" the stock one said, And gently raised his drooping head;

"His hours are past, and I shall be From pain, from grief, from anguish free!"

The mourner breathed in tones of sadness:

"Bless the old year! It brought no gladness; I learned on earth no home to make; Bless it for its lesson's sake!"

"Bless the old year!" said the child with glees;

"In many hours I was happy and free; It has brought me frolic for every day; Bless the old year ere it passes away!"

Bless the old year! Come one, and all, Let it go be the last sound he shall hear! Shall each a blessing! Bless the old year!

—Lillian Frances Mentor, in New York Herald.
