His reasons are worth recording. He does not discuss the question whether it is proper to confer such titles on the ministers of Christ. But if so, he thinks that these doctor dignities should be given to men of qualifications of higher order, intellectually and morally, than he makes any pretension to. We admire the Bishop's modesty; we have no doubt he is a good man, and we think that fie puts his refusal upon the right ground. If a clergyman be distinguished for his mastery of the science of divinity, the title of doctor of that kind is proper enough: but the double D is getting so cheap and common that it stands a chance also of becoming meaningless. of Divinity by the Otterbein University J.
