further cause them to complain of the general manner of introducing the laws of England without informing them exactly and particularly what those laws were, that they might know how to obey them. But these are objections which, as we before observed, would probably be made by a few perfons only, and not by the generality of your Majesty's new subjects.

Conclusion.

Thus we have fet forth to your Majefty at confiderable length (but not greater, we hope, than the importance of the fubject required) the different methods by which your Majefty's gracious intention of fettling the laws of this province upon a folic and permanent foundation for the time to come, and of leaving to your Majefty's new Canadian fubjects the enjoyment of fome of their ancient laws and cuftoms that are most necessary to their tranquillity and fatisfaction, may be carried into execution, together with the feveral advantages and difadvantages with which we apprenend that each of them will be attended. To weigh these advantages and difadvantages against each other, and draw a final balance in favour of one of their methods in preference to the reft, or to find a new method preferable to them all, is a talk to which we find ourfelves unequal, and which we apprehend can be fucceffully performed only by the wifdom of your Majefty's counfels. By refiding in the province we may have been able perhaps, by our observation of the state of things here, to furnish your Majesty with neceffary information and materials for forming a decifive judgement upon the fubject; and that, in obedience to your Majesty's commands, we have endeavoured to do faithfully and fully, and to the best of our abilties, in this report. That our endeavours may be acceptable to your Majesty, and may be esteemed rather according to the zeal and integrity by which they have been directed, than according to the degree in which they may be found to answer the high purposes to which they were intended to be fubservient, is the earnest wish of,

Your MAJESTY'S

Most loyal and devoted

Subjects and Servants.

N.B. The