An eviction took place, on January 1

at a place near Creggs, in the townland of Derrihippo, on the estate of George Caul-field, Donamon Castle, but now residing in London. The tenant offered one year' rent to his agent, E. Armstrong, Emlaroy some time ago, and promised the remain-der in March, but he refused. The bailiff and sub-sheriff proceeded to the house of a poor man named Bryan Mulry, whose wife is a cripple and had to be carried out; she is a member of a family of nine. They next proceeded to the house of Pat Noone, and carried out the sentence of death. The lands from which they were evicted were of the worst kind, it being the fag end of lands cleared and converted into sheepwalks by the hand of the exterminator, in '47 and '48. They were admitted as caretakers.

NARROW-MINDED!

A correspondent writes: "Several non-Catholics (Episcopalians) were shown your editorial on the Bell of Liberty, etc., and they said the writer of the article was narrow-minded, and that the comparison was ridiculous. Another (Atheistical) said the Bell was a fact and Catholic relics a myth. Isn't it hard to make non-Catholics understand?" It is very hard to make non-Catholics appreciate the inconsistency of their posi-tion. The Protestant Episcopalian who will gaze with reverence at the Liberty Bell, and in England pay respectful attention to the seal of the Magna Charta, not doubting the authenticity of either, will scoff at a relic of a saint which has been guarded from generation to generation of reverent believers. It is not so very long since Our Lord was crucified. Wellington during the wars of that eventful period. > If the Philadelphians were justified in hanging out colored bunting and decora-tions in honor of the passage of the Bell of '76 through their streets, why would ot the Parisians be equally justifiable, in the eyes of non-Catholics, in hanging tapestry from their balconies in honor of Genevieve, or the Milanese in honor of St. Charles Borromeo? It ought to strike our correspondent -- as it probably does strike him-that the narrow-mindedness is not on the side of people who do not object to the respect shown to the old Bell or to the dilapidated re-mains of Magna Charta, while they hold the relics and presentments of God's servants in higher respect. Down in Washington they preserve "the immortal George's" old clothes in a glass case; his buff waistcoat and blue inexpressibles, etc. No rough hand would be permitted to touch these relics. Similar honor paid to clothes worn by the martyr Father Jogues would be a subject for derisive miles by some critics.

The new Upright Pianos of Mason & Hamlin are highly praised by good judges. They possess a refinement of musical tone which charms the conneisseur and all who hear it. This is owing largely to the new system of their construction. The great experience of Mason & Hamlin in their organ business, with the aid of their large corps of superior musical and mechanical experts, has enabled them, after several years of expensive experiments, to produce a plano which bids fair to do more for their reputation than even their famous organs have accomplished. Their chief improvement consists in securing the strings by metallic fastenings, instead of pins held by friction, which renders it easy to put the three strings of each tone exactly in unison, and thereby produce tones of wonderful sweetness and purity. Messrs. Mason & Hamlin have made 150,000 cabinet organs. They can hardly hope to reach this number of planos, but we doubt not their new "Uprighis" will command a very large sale:—Boston Traveller.
