The School of Calvary

By J. H. JOWETT, M.A., D.D. Taste-fully bound in silk grain cloth boards, with design in gold. 50c. net.

Dr. Jowett has caught the idea of this book from the words of a great mystic three hundred years ago, who wrote 'Calvary is the true academy of love.' A succession of eloquent and suggestive chapters show how the wealth and fullness of life come to those who have learnt in the school of Christ the spirit that found perfect expression in the Cross

The organ of the Temple Church in London, which has been for some months past under repair and reconstruction, was used for the first time on a recent Sunday. It is, however, still far from complete. The organ was originally built by Bernard Smith, called Father Smith, in 1682-64 and it was purchased in June, 1688, by the Societies of the Middle and Inner Temple, for £1,000. There were very large congregations present on that day and in the afternoon there were so many applicants for admission that the outer gates of the Temple in Fleet Street had to be closed.

The east window of the south aisle of the Lady-chapel of York Minster, which has been in a very bad state for some months, has now been restored. It contained some of the finest medieval stained-glass in the Cathedral. Much of it had worn very thin, and in portions it had completely perished. The whole of the work has been strengthened, re-cemented, and re-fixed. Every scrap of the old glass that could possibly be saved has been preserved, and leads placed on every crack. The artistic value of the window is considerable, on account of the wonderful toning and blending of colours.
