

SAVED THEIR BOY.

HE HAD BEEN WEAK AND AILING FROM INFANCY.

As He Grew Older His Trouble Seemed to Increase and His Parents Thought Him Doomed to an Invalid's Life. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Cured Him When Hope Had Almost Departed.

(From the Post, Thorold, Ont.)

Mr. James Daband and wife are two of the best known residents of the town of Thorold, where they have passed many years. In their family they have a little son, who, although but ten years of age, has experienced much affliction, and his parents expended many a dollar in the search for his renewed health, all in vain, however, until Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were brought into use. A Post reporter, hearing of the cure, called at Mr. Daband's cosy home and received full particulars from Mrs. Daband. "I am pleased," said Mrs. Daband, "to have the public made aware of the facts of my boy's case. It is likely to help some other sufferer. Charles is now ten years of age. In infancy he was a delicate child, but from four to seven he scarcely passed a well day. At four years of age he began to complain of frequent headaches, which became almost continuous, and symptoms of general debility developed. His appetite was poor, and he grew pale and emaciated, and the least exertion caused a severe palpitation and fluttering of the heart and dizziness. At times there was considerable derangement of his stomach; a blueness of the lips and a shortness of breath. He would often lie awake at night and rise in the morning haggard and unfreshed. During his illness he was treated by two doctors. Both differed in the diagnosis of his case. One said it was catarrh of the stomach, and while his treatment was persisted in there was no improvement. The second also attended him for some time and with no better results. Some time after my attention was attracted by my aunt to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and about September, 1897, I procured the pills and began taking them. We had long before come to the conclusion he would be an invalid for life, but believing it a duty I owed to my child to procure all means of relief, I was determined to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial. The good effects of the first box was apparent, and five boxes were used, which were taken about six months' time, when he was strong and well, and could attend school and play and frolic as other healthy boys do. As every symptom of his old trouble has vanished, I consider my cure complete. The pills have certainly done him a world of good, as nearly three years have since passed away, and he has not seen a sick day since that length of time. I shall ever feel that we owe our boy's health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and believe that their prompt use would relieve much suffering."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are just as valuable in the case of children as with adults, and grow fat under this treatment, which has no equal for building up the blood and giving renewed strength to brain, body and nerves. Sold by druggists or sent post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Brockville, Ont. No one will be persuaded to try something else said to be "just as good."

COST HER WEIGHT IN GOLD.

California Woman Whose Husband Bought Her From a Priest.

"There is an old lady living in southern California, at the patriotic little mountain settlement known as American Flag, who is an object of much interest to strangers. The fact that she is probably the only woman on earth the valuation of whose person ever was literally appraised at 'her weight in gold,' said Major H. Gardner, late of the census bureau. "She is 68 years old now and the widow of one Jesus Castro, a Mexican. This Mexican was one of the first miners who struck gold in California in the pioneer days of California. He lived in the Santa Catalina mountains, and returned home more than loaded down with gold dust. He fell passionately in love with his brother's daughter, a handsome girl of 17. She returned her uncle's love and consented to marry him. The priest to whom they were betrothed, however, refused to marry them. Castro offered as high as $5,000 to the church as an inducement for the priest to perform the marriage. Then, as the old widow's story goes, Castro asked what amount of wealth would induce him to marry them. The priest, with the intention and expectation of impressing Castro with the hopelessness of his appeal, replied: "The girl's weight in gold."

"Now, the Mexican maiden, while not being over-buxom, was well-to-do in figure for one of her age, but Castro did not even pause long enough to ascertain what her weight might be. He exclaimed: "Good, holy father!" "Then he ordered scales to be brought, and, begging the girl to turn on one side of them, he poured glittering gold dust into the other side until the precious staff balanced the weight of his innamorata. The priest was dumb with amazement, and ere long sufficient to say the promised words that made the twain one. Castro had won his bride at the cost of 125 pounds of his hoarded gold. He had a snug lot left, however, and the story is that he lived long enough to see the time that he would have taken a great deal less than her weight in gold for the wife on which his youthful ardor placed so great a value."

Something About Thibet.

Thibet is larger than France, Germany and Spain combined, and has a population of 6,000,000. It is ruled over by Dalai Lama, who acknowledges only a nominal allegiance to China. He is the head of the Buddhist religion, and is the religious of the Tibetan people. He is an ambitious man, and it is believed that he would make trouble for China.

THE MURDER OF RULERS.

Spread of the Anarchist Movement in Europe.

BLIND HATRED OF AUTHORITY.

The cruel assassination of King Humbert of Italy, all the more detestable because he was personally possessed of many noble qualities, and had faithfully walked in the steps of a father of whom all Italy was proud, has recalled the mind of Europe to the danger which threatens the heads of all states, whether monarchial or republican, from those who are commonly, though perhaps rather loosely, called Anarchists. Yet the impression of horror made by this deplorable event seems less than might have been expected. People have become so much accustomed to see crimes of this kind perpetrated as to have grown callously callous. Since the murder of the Czar Alexander the Second, in 1882, a epidemic of political assassination has prevailed in Europe, the attack which marked the latter part of the sixteenth and earlier part of the seventeenth centuries.

Historic Assassinations Recalled.

King Henry the Fourth, in France, and the Regent, Murray, in Scotland, were only two of the most conspicuous among its many victims. The massacre of St. Bartholomew's eve and the attempt to kill Queen Elizabeth in England, and Parliament, which is called after Guy Fawkes, were instances on a great scale of the effort to attain political objects by the slaughter in time of peace of political opponents; and both were approved or condoned by the public opinion of large sections of Europe. Many plots were formed to kill Queen Elizabeth, and again, to kill Oliver Cromwell, but so far as England is concerned the habit practically died out till it recently revived in the plans directed against Mr. Gladstone, W. E. Forster, and in the murder of Lord Frederick Cavendish and Mr. Burke, in 1882.

Victims All Good Men.

All these cases, however, were cases in which there was some hostility to the individual victim, either on personal grounds, or because he exercised a power which the conspirators desired to remove from his path. The significant feature of the present anarchistic epidemic is that it is directed against persons merely in respect to their position as rulers or connected with reigning families, together apart from their personal life.

There was no personal hatred to President Sadi Carnot, an estimable man and merely the titular head of a free nation; still less to the Empress of Austria, a woman whose character and misfortunes have been expected to win sympathy from the hardest heart. Indeed, it is remarkable that the victims have usually been the most amiable and beneficent men. Of President Lincoln there is need to speak. The Czar Alexander had liberated the serfs, and was when he perished trying to liberalize Russian administration. Lord Frederick Cavendish had come to Ireland on a mission of conciliation.

Assassins Indifferent to Escape.

There are two phenomena about these so-called Anarchists—the word must be used "under protest"—assassinations which are felt to be especially formidable. One is the fact that, as just observed, the victim is selected on the basis of his position, his personality, and merely in respect to his or her position. Spido, the Italian-Belgian who tried to kill the Prince of Wales, had no animosity to the Prince, but merely knew he was the Queen of England's son. The other is that the assassin is in many cases indifferent to his own escape. He would doubtless prefer to escape, but he is ready to attain his object at the cost of his own death or lifelong imprisonment.

It is impossible to take complete precautions and punishment has comparatively little deterrent effect. Here again we are reminded of the assassinations of the sixteenth century. They were largely due to religious passion, and the man who thinks he is rendering a service to his religion seeks little of his own life. Mohammedan fanaticism, such as was the man who killed Lord Mayo, Viceroy of India, in the Andaman Islands, are equally disregardful of their own safety, and willingly accept a death which secures their entrance to Paradise. Something like this is evidently the case with men who are assassins of President Carnot and the Empress of Austria and King Humbert. They are possessed by a hatred of society and the Government as at present constituted, which has all the effect of religious fanaticism and takes no heed of the consequences to themselves.

Well-Meaning Anarchists.

Notwithstanding the excitement caused by these assassinations and the attention the nations have directed to the whole subject, the European public knows extremely little about what it calls the Anarchist movement. It has not data for finding even how far the assassinations are to be connected with the speculative doctrines of Anarchy, and probably exaggerates, in its ignorance, the extent of such connection as exists. Many of those who hold anarchism as a speculative doctrine are perfectly harmless and well-meaning men, who would give no encouragement to slaughter. It is unjust to them to brand them with responsibility for deeds of violence. Some at least of those who plot or perpetrate murders seem to be persons with a strong natural propensity to crime, who need no speculative theory to spur them on.

Probably the police of some European countries know more than they have given, or think it wise to give, to the public. But it may be doubted whether even the police can determine what relations the criminal side of the movement has with the theoretical or doctrinal side.

Can't Repress Anarchism.

For the last ten years or more governments of continental Europe have been busy themselves with schemes for dealing with the evil, but they seem to have no success. Six or seven years ago, after the dynamite attack on the British Government, the British Government was invited to take in some severely repressive measures, but Britain, as in the United States, the settled maxima and minimum of law and administration, make it impossible to take the kind of arbitrary action which is permitted in most continental countries. Nor do those wider police powers which continental governments command seem to succeed, for the evil goes on.

Punishment Should be Rigorous.

It is even possible that greater severity might aggravate. Nevertheless, one cannot but regret that capital punishment has been abolished in Italy, and cannot but stand astonished at what has happened in Belgium where Spido has been allowed, through the weakness, first of the jury and then of the administration, to escape scot free. Perhaps there is nothing to be done but see that every assassin receives punishment and wait patiently till the epidemic dies out of itself, as other epidemics of crime and folly have done before. New conditions have engendered it, for the more it is aggravated the tendency of it. When these conditions have themselves become modified, it, too, may decline and disappear.

But it is one of the most depressing features of the closing century.

One of the most painful proofs that the hopes of rapid human progress which were so ripe in the world in early years ago were too sanguine. James Bryce, M. P., in Philadelphia Record.

Ambassador Choate recently had an amusing experience in a London bookshop, where he went to buy a copy of Dante's Hell. The clerk departed to seek the book, but soon returned to remark: "I am very sorry, but we haven't got Hell, but Mr. Dante. We've got 'Twenty Years in South Africa,' by Cecil Rhodes, if that will do." "And feeling," concluded Mr. Choate, "that that was practically the same thing, I took the book."—Argonaut.

Foreigners in New England.

An unusually large number of foreign immigrants appear to be settling at present in some parts of the New England States, where they obtain work in the cotton mills and in connection with other industries. Lately, it is said, in Connecticut and Rhode Island, the preference has been given to Greeks, while in the Fall River mills a large number of Portuguese and Poles have found employment.

For How Long?

"I cannot understand," said Whittier, "why it is that so many fellows know as much about their wives as I don't feel that way." "Do you mean to say," said Bitter, "that you do exactly as you please, without being influenced by anything your wife says?" "That's exactly what I mean," replied Whittier. "This idea of losing your individuality just because you happen to be married is all nonsense. I tell you that I lead an absolutely untrammelled existence. If I feel like not going home after business, I don't go. And if I want to ask my friends in for a little game at cards, I don't hesitate to do so. I smoke all over the house, insist upon having my favorite dishes, stay at home from church when I want to, rearrange the furniture to suit myself, and, in fact, down to the smallest detail of my daily life I do absolutely as I please, without let or hindrance. It's the only way to live."

Bitter regarded his friend with a look of grave suspicion.

"Well, well," he said somewhat satirically, "you are a wonder. How long have you been doing this sort of thing?" "I have been doing it," said Whittier, calmly and complacently, "ever since my wife went to her cousin's in the country on a visit."

The Bible Trust is Ready.

For nearly half a century the American Bible Society has been engaged in printing and annually distributing the Bible throughout the world in all countries. Through the instrumentality of the society the Bible was put within the reach of all at a trifling cost, and every man and woman has felt the impulse of its great work in elevating the human race. Now, however, the trust has laid its hand upon this great enterprise and soon the American Bible Society has been forced out of the business, and that henceforth its work will be conducted by the Bible Trust—Omaha World-Herald.

To Preserve Tomatoes.

A sore trial to many in preserving tomatoes is, they refuse to retain their identity, but get soft and mushy. The following will prevent this, and each individual tomato will remain as a distinct and perfect as need be. Select firm, small, yellow tomatoes; scald just barely enough so the skins will come off easily. After the skins are removed drop them into lime water and let stand over night. In the morning drain well and simmer in a rich syrup twenty minutes or more, until fruit looks clear. Add a few pieces of root ginger; this modifies any unpleasant flavor.

PRACTICED BY THE ANCIENTS.

Corner Stone of Rome's Rebuilt Capital Laid With Ceremony.

Lancelotti, the Roman archaeologist, has discovered that it was the custom in old Rome to lay the corner-stone of a public building with elaborate ceremonies, and he cites proof that this was a universal practice in the ancient world. At the laying of the corner-stone when the capitol of Rome was rebuilt a procession of vestal virgins robed in white surrounded the stone and consecrated it with libations of water. A prayer to the gods followed, and then the magistrates, priests, senators and knights laid hold of the ropes and moved the mighty stone to its proper position. In a hollow cut in the stone were placed ingots of gold, silver and other metals which had not been melted in any furnace. With the Jews the corner-stone was considered an emblem of power, and they also performed ceremonies at its laying. In medieval times the rite was taken up by the Order of Free Masons, and has by them been brought "down to modern days. The Masonic ceremony of laying a corner-stone is symbolic. The form of the stone, a square on the surface and a perfect cube; its place at the northeast corner of the structure, the testing it with a square, level, plumb, and the pouring of libations of corn, wine and oil over it—all have their hidden meaning. The custom of laying the corner-stone with ceremonies is usually observed at the commencement of any public building, and the stone is usually placed in the wall of the building, and is placed within the stone to serve as a valuable historical relic when the building is destroyed.
