Great News From Bagdad!

It is a relief to turn from the terrible which Germany produces in every case to the exhilarating news of what the British occupation of Bagdad and of the Land of the Two Rivers means in terms of human happiness to those who dwell there in.

"The highly satisfactory results that have been produced in the Bagdad vilayet by a year of British military administration have not failed to make an impression on the local population," says Reuter. "In the words of an Arab proverb, 'the Arab's intelligence is in his eyes' and all can understand the picture that is presented this spring.

"The care which the military administration has expended on agricultural development and on irrigation is bearing fruit in abundance. On land which has lain unutilized for many years the rural cultivators and the tribesmen now see crops ripening; and they compare the prospect before them with the harrowing reports of starvation which refugees have brought down from Turkish and Persian territory. By timely aid famine has been averted in the occupied territories on the Persian frontier, a region which the Turkish armies had devastated.

Great Harvests.
 "Writing from Mesopotamia on the success of irrigation works in the Euphrates Valley undertaken by the British since the capture of Bagdad, Mr. Edmund Candler says:—

"During the summer we have been at work on the irrigation scheme. This year nearly a hundred canals on the Hillish branch which had fallen into disuse have been dug out.

"Three hundred thousand acres have been brought under cultivation, and there is promise of the greatest harvest in the memory of man, possibly the greatest since the days of Nebuchadnezzar.

"The effect of the work will be far-reaching. The irrigation scheme will reduce the tonnage required for food-stuff on the line of communications by thousands of tons, and set free rolling stock and river transport for ordnance and other supplies."

Shekhs on Trains.
 And here are a series of wonderful paragraphs translated from the Bahadri native paper, Al Arab, which in their simplicity of fact tell a wonderful tale:—

"When the British began to complete the railway to the Persian Gulf, they induced certain of the Arab to work as labourers. They did this more to disarm the timid Arabs of fear of foreign invasion than of need of their help. Hence the people in their goat-hair tents watched the shining rails being pushed southward by their own men, and by the time it was completed they had heard from them what it all meant.

"One of the things the English did was to invite the shekhs of important tribes to go to Bushrah in the first through train. They went in silent acquiescence, but came back loud in their praise of what it meant to their land, and asking of Allah every good to come to the great British Government day.

"But one of the best things the new government has done is to gather together the idle and good-for-nothing in the city and put them to work, thus bringing rest and safety to all.

Fair Rents.
 "Under the rule of the Turks, the land adjacent to the rivers was let to those of the tribes who practice farming, at increasingly high rates, until their taxes were so high that they barely managed to live. One of the first things the British did was to take over all those lands and rent them to those oppressed tenants at a reasonable figure.

"The Governor of Bagdad has announced that every house in the city has been registered and appraised. No one will be allowed to charge rent for any dwelling exceeding ten per cent of its valuation.

"A system of education has been inaugurated in this city of Bagdad by the British, and the children are all busily studying, where before they had never had a chance to get even a little education excepting at the mission schools.

"The endowments (wakf) of the various places of worship have also been registered, so that nothing can be expended without being accounted for by the notable in whose hands they are kept.

"Early in November, when the Electric Light Company lighted the streets of Bagdad with electricity, the people were filled with astonishment. Some declared that nothing less than the Jinn could produce such brilliant light. Others asserted that it was male and female, the latter being the lights of the city, while the males were kept in the pockets of the Englishmen."—Public Opinion.
