STOCKYARDS WILL SAVE LONDONERS HUGE SUM WEEKLY

Alderman Haney Claims Almost $1,000 Weekly Would Remain in Pockets.

ON FRESH MEAT ALONE

Wholesale Price Would Be Regulated as Soon as Yards Opened.

To the Editor of The Advertiser: After going carefully into the matter of beef consumption in the city of London, I am convinced that between $500 and $1,000 a week can be saved for our citizens by establishing the proposed stockyards.

Immediately the new stockyards are opened in this city the wholesale price of beef will be regulated by the price on all other markets. and we find that this ranges, at the present moment, from 50c to $1 per hundredweight lower almost everywhere else on the continent. For instance, the quotations on dressed beef by the carcase in Toonto last week were from 10 to 101/2c per pound, while in London ran just an even cent higher on all The saving will be effected in this

We find that there is a weekly consumption of approximately 200 head of beef cattle, which will dress 500 pounds each, or a grand total of 100,000 pounds. This, at one-cent would mean $1,000 per week, or $52,000 per year. It asts $1.25 per head to lay cattle down in To-ronto from points between Glencoe or Ailsa Craig and London, while 75 cents per head would lay them down in our own stockyards. This is a saving of 50 cents per head. It costs the drover (and, of course, the producer) 60 cents per nead to get his cattle sold on the Toronto market, while I hope to see the London yards kept an open market, where any man is at liberty to sell his own stuff. These two items ought to affect the price here to the extent of almost 14 cent per pound, and we find that it costs slightly over 14 cent per pound to bring dressed beef back here from Toronto. The other ½ cent per pound is made up, as I figure it, in the cost of scouring the country round about to get the cattle and in the loss of the by-

It may astonish the people if London to learn that there are at the present time, about 14 packing houses delivering meat in London every week, and doing practically half the fresh meat trade while ten years ago there were fifty wholesale butchers operating on our market; men who lived here or in the surrounding district, and who paid a business tax and helped burden in that way, while the packing houses contribcent in taxes or business fees. Today we find that the wholesale butchers can be counted on the fingers of one hand, and they are being driven out of the increasingly harder for them get their supplies on account of every hoof going to Toronto, where the big fellows take advantage of their monopoly to hammer the prices to their own liking.

The establishment of the stock yards here will certainly revise the packing business, but that will in no way affect the price of meat, because any packing house established here have the benefit of the freight and selling commission mentioned above while the wholesale butches can go to the yards and take his pick of such animals as are offered from day to day. I am endeavoring to show that while we are paying dearly for our meat, it is because we ave allowed the beef trusts to monopolize our market and put our own itizens out of business. We lose the labor of killing and dressing the roducts: the tallow, the hides, the fertilizers and the bones. To properly take care of the fresh-meat trade of London should mean the constant employment, in killing, dressing and marketing, of a large other towns and cities to do this for us, and they pay not one cent into the city treasury for the privilege. It is time that London woke up to this condition of affairs. them to go to the polls and help remedy them.
