

SAYS FOCH WILL CLEARLY DEFEND FRENCH AIMS AT WASHINGTON

SEES PROBLEMS FROM SOLDIERS' POINT OF VIEW

OPPOSES DISARMAMENT

Hope Lies in Growing Economic Relations Between Former Bitterest Enemies.

Sir Philip Gibbs Says Marshal's Attendance Has Deep Significance.

[Special to The Advertiser.]

[By Sir Philip Gibbs.]

LONDON, Oct. 12.—The presence of Marshal Foch at the Washington conference for the limitation of armament, which at present seems certain, should have a far greater importance than a mere ceremonial appearance signifying the desire of official France to co-operate closely with the United States in shaping a world policy, provided French interests and security are not endangered.

When Marshal Foch speaks before the conference on the possibilities of disarmament, or when he expresses his views in private conversations with American statesmen, he will not do so without diplomatic craft or subtlety, but with simple candor and without mental reservations.

He will represent the French view point, as it is fixed in certain convictions and principles, and he will not budge one hair breadth whether they please or displease American opinion. His mind is as sharp as a sword, as finely tempered as a Toledo blade and as clean as steel, and his character has a fine simplicity which has no guile, but he is limited to certain lines of thought which are rather narrow. He sees the world policy from one angle of vision which is the future safety of France, and believes that what he gained by the sword may only be held by the sword.

A Watch Dog for France.

He has little faith in a German change of heart and less perhaps in the possibility of any political or philosophical changes among European peoples likely to eliminate the menace of war. He is hard, practical and realistic in his outlook, and he will not surrender anything which seems to him to be essential to the safety and power of France for vague idealistic dreams or ideals which to some of us seem the best, indeed, the only way to safety for France and all of us.

In his country, like all great men, Marshal Foch has enemies and critics. They are mainly advanced democrats and liberals who believe that Marshal Foch used his influence to maintain the militaristic and reactionary policy of the French Government. I was startled and scandalized when a Frenchman said to me:

"Foch, my dear sir, has the soul of a grocer. He measures up life with a bit of string."

For Foch as a soldier I have unbounded admiration, and if any one man may be said to have saved us all, it was undoubtedly Marshal Foch. Especially at that desperate and critical time when the full weight of the German offensive fell against the British lines with 148 divisions against 48. Foch came himself to our lines, as I saw him then, cool and unflinching. To General Plumer, commanding the British second army, worn thin and hard-pressed, he said:

"How many French divisions do you want?"

And when Plumer answered Foch wrote a note in a little pocketbook and handed it to Plumer. It was an "O. C." for certain French divisions. There was no hesitation, no red-tape, no grudging conditions, and for three days afterwards the French roads were white with dust and blue with endless columns of marching soldiers fulfilling that promise of Foch's pocketbook.

He skinned his own front to strengthen the British, though he knew that before long the German army would strike at him. When that attack happened he withdrew his blue men from the British lines with the same quickness of decision and lightning rapidity of action, with a margin of only 24 hours between that movement and inevitable defeat.

At that time, when the Germans had broken through the French front, Paris was threatened again, and all of us were in deep gloom. Foch sat at his head of the table, his eyes fixed on the map, his hands on his knees, his face as white as paper.

Lord Milner could not resist asking Foch:

"What do you think of the situation?"

Foch was silent for some seconds. Then he looked up and said:

"I cannot help pitying Ludendorff."

Lord Milner was astounded and said:

"Surely you cannot mean that?"

"Yes," said Marshal Foch; "his job is more difficult than mine, and I shall beat him."

Conflict of ideas.

That revealed the supreme courage and genius of this man who has never been known to boast or utter a promise which he has not fulfilled.

When on another critical day he said: "I guarantee Amiens," he seemed to be saying rash words. But Amiens did not fall to the Germans.

As a soldier, therefore, Marshal Foch would go down in history as one of the world's foremost generals. It is another thing with his statesmanship, but it is not his fault that he sees the policy of France through a soldier's eyes.

There is another vision in France, fortunately, and that is from an economic and not from a military angle. More and more French economists are beginning to influence the French foreign policy, though they still have a hard struggle before them.

Whereas the Foch school thinks that to keep Germany by the throat and snake her pockets is the most profitable policy, the economists in France have at last realized that strangulation and pocket snaking are not going to help France get her reparations or revive her trade.

An agreement has now been made between France and Germany by which the devastated regions will be rebuilt with German material and manufactured goods, which are to be counted as indemnity instead of deliveries of German money which throws the foreign exchange into convulsions.

This is a distinct step forward in European recovery. It may even lead to the miracle of producing good relations between France and Germany, based on common interests, and that would help matters enormously at the Washington conference if it could happen quickly.

But it is a miracle not to be expected by impatient folk. Apart from that, however, it does indicate a way to escape the present fears and dangers, for as I have always repeated as a kind of religious creed, the political chaos of Europe can only be straightened out by economic sanity. Trade will never revive, hatreds will never die down until one nation learns that her own prosperity cannot be regained by ruining her neighbor, and that we all are dependent on one another for raw materials, markets and labor.

France has refused to recognize that natural law for the last three years. She believed in keeping Germany weary and desperate. That is the popular idea still in France, but the recent agreement between Louis Loucheur and Dr. Walter Rathenau shows a modification in the official policy at least as far as making use of German industry and labor is concerned.

France Wants Guarantees.

Whatever her representative speaks for France at Washington will demand only one thing for his country with regard to the limitation of armaments and that is security. There is no belief in the French mind that Germany will remain with peaceful intent and it must be admitted that it is not as a reproach, but as a natural fact, due to frightful memories that the French do not go out of their way to foster friendly feelings.

France, therefore, asks moral guarantees from America and Great Britain in case of a German attack before she will consent to turn her guns into plowshares. From the United States there is no possibility of such a guarantee and from Great Britain there is not much chance either, owing to the present exhaustion of men and money.

There is only one way in which France may get a reasonable insurance against future German aggression, and that is co-operation of economic lines and commercial arrangements between Germany and other powers friendly to France, which would lead to Germany's greater ruin if broken by war or revenge.

Since I last wrote, the English people are awakening to a more immediate national interest in the possibilities of the Washington conference.

This is partly due to intensive propaganda by leaflets and pamphlets issued to the working folk by various societies, the main object of which is to escape from disaster owing to the loss of trade and the creeping paralysis of unemployment.

Premier Lloyd George is preparing a big scheme for relief of the unemployed, but does not hide the fact that all such attempts can be only temporary remedies, and that no permanent improvement can happen until Europe recovers all around, thus restoring British markets. London is a gloomy city just now, with processions of the unemployed, street collections for ex-service men and beggars everywhere.

Meanwhile financial experts like Viscount Rothermere prophesy that the British income tax will soar still higher to 8 and even 10 shillings to the pound.

That is an appalling outlook for all of us at a time when men who used to be rich before the war are closing their houses and trying vainly to sell old estates, and when great employers of labor are borrowing to pay their taxes.

This financial crisis is having an effect on political problems. The necessity for peace and economy is the first thought of all British statesmen, and that thought will introduce a spirit of concession at the Irish conference now taking place.

Must Settle Irish "Question."

Peace with Ireland is an essential preliminary to the general peace policy of the British Empire, and the most important item in our credentials to Washington.

My readers will, I think, agree that I do not hide the ugly facts by soft words and phrase making, but let it be regarded as a prophet of gloom I will finish this dispatch by saying that though I see much that is tragic in the present state of affairs, and in the deep-seated disease of the world's economic state, I believe firmly that we are getting back to sanity, and facing realities with more common sense, and are gradually obtaining a new understanding of world problems, which will lead presently to world recovery.

But we need patience and courage and truth to face the prejudices and foolish passions of national egotism. Above all we need men who will tell the truth at the risk of popular disfavor.

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup
Easily and cheaply made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using this well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, pour it into a 16-oz. bottle and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make 16 ounces. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey or corn syrup instead of sugar syrup. Either way it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat, and loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat trouble and cough gradually disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, hoarseness or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

Coming Election Fourteenth Since Time of Confederation

J. A. WALLACE'S CANDIDACY UPHELD BY NORFOLK U. F. O.

Squabbles Over Telephone Nearly Split Voting Power of Farmers.

SIMCOE, Oct. 14.—The executive of the Norfolk County U. F. O. met at the Norfolk Hotel today and by a majority ballot decided to uphold J. Alex. Wallace's candidacy. It was a last-minute meeting held before the mass meeting to be held in the armories on Tuesday, when Hon. T. A. Cressy, Premier Drury and J. J. Morrison will speak.

The occasion was the subject of hot discussion with malcontents of Township and Township opposing Mr. Wallace on the score of his refusal to remove his telephone. When the farmers boycotted the Norfolk County Company because of increased rates.

Joseph Criddle, M.L.A. for South Norfolk, made a strong plea for unity and pleaded with the delegates not to make the telephone controversy a political issue.

"Mine was the first telephone ordered on the farm," said Mr. Criddle, "but Mr. Wallace shows us that his telephone is a financial necessity."

Now a Folly to Have Corns

Millions of People Know an Easy Way to End Them—Quick and Sure

FOLKS all about you now treat corns in this scientific way. That's why corns are becoming so uncommon. At the first corn pain they apply Blue-jay—the liquid or the plaster—for sale at all druggists. The pain stops instantly. Soon the whole corn gently loosens and comes out.

This is not like old ways, harsh and crude. It is the modern method, put out by a laboratory of world-wide repute.

For millions of people it has solved the corn problem. It will bring you freedom—forever—when you know it. For your own sake, find this out tonight.

Supreme Court Decides PORT STANLEY ROAD CASE

Defendant Wins Dispute Over Highway Maintenance.

Word was received in the city yesterday from Ottawa by J. M. McEvoy, K.C., that the Supreme Court of Canada had sustained the judgment of the Court of Appeal for Ontario wherein it was held that Mrs. Harrison was not compelled, under her conveyance to Mrs. James Kerrigan to maintain the road known as "Harrison Place" which formerly ran parallel to the lake shore for a considerable distance at Port Stanley.

In 1917 and the spring of 1918 the lake carried away the road which ran along a high and almost perpendicular hill. Mrs. James Kerrigan claimed that Mrs. Harrison was obliged to keep the road in repair notwithstanding the actions of the lake or otherwise to pay damages for the loss of the road's condition caused Mrs. Kerrigan's cottage.

The matter has been in litigation now for some three years, and was finally disposed of by the Supreme Court of Canada, holding that Mrs. Harrison is not compelled to maintain the road against the sudden uncontrolled actions of the lake.

Messrs. Gibbons, Harper & Co. acted for Mrs. Kerrigan, and J. M. McEvoy, K.C., for Mrs. Harrison.
