UNDER THE SHADOW OF THE GALLOWES.

bladed ordinary jack-knife found in his possession when arrested. That this was the weapon used is proven by the fact that although it was a commonly sharpened blade had been washed clean and its handle bears evidence of having been scraped, still in the knife are deposited which Detective Murray has to his credit in saying are dried blood.

Some of the victims blood must have lodged between the fingers of her slayer, and an examination of Chattle's hands was made to see if any traces of blood could be found. The discovery was then made that his fingernails were cut down to the quick. He had obliterated the stains by removing the nails.

Detective Murray is convinced that the man, although apparently perfectly sane now, is subject to fits of insanity. His restless eyes have the look of a maniac, while the unaccounted manner he has exhibited ever since his arrest for the crime is not consistent with that of a sane man, guilty or innocent.

The Situation in Liverpool. Liverpool, Oct. 24.—When intelligence reached here at noon to-day that the tramp Almada Chattle had been positively identified as the man who was seen in the vicinity of the bank where Jessie Keith was murdered and that the strongest possible chain of circumstantial evidence had been passed around him, the astonishment was simply indescribable.

Most communities worked up to the pitch of excitement that this town was making up their minds that they must have a guilty man, and if they cannot do so they will have a man who is innocent if he is worth the plucking. But Liverpool people do not entertain the same notions as to the propriety of a murder and they do not stop to consider whether or not they would not live to see another sun rise on the same soil, and be beheaded. Kelly had been in ill-health for some time, and of late had shown signs of mental derangement.

Chattle at Leam. Leam, Oct. 24.—Mr. Joseph Hall, farmer, living just outside the town, was the first to see the man who was seen in the vicinity of the bank where Jessie Keith was murdered and that the strongest possible chain of circumstantial evidence had been passed around him, the astonishment was simply indescribable.

CARSON HOWELL'S SUICIDE.

An Incident at Portland Throwing Some Light on the Subject.

Portland, Mich., Oct. 24.—Carson Howell's suicide was caused by a letter he received from his wife last Tuesday while in Portland. He confided its contents to W. W. Terrill, who still respects a promise made to Edward Mack to not reveal its contents. Mr. Terrill told how, however, to show that Howell must have known the contents of the letter, as the letter hinted at transactions with which he was not familiar. When he read it at the post office he fainted. He remained in Portland two days, neglecting his insurance business and endeavoring to get further light on the mystery. While here he seemed to be greatly devoted to his wife and children, and often referred to them in conversation. He wrote and received letters from home daily, and on Tuesday night he wrote a letter to his wife at Jerseyville, Ont. The news of his suicide at Jerseyville, Ont., created great surprise.
