X X X 9 1 C -

THE TRUE WITNESS AND CATHOLIC CHRONICLE.

BRIDES. THE TWO WESSHOULD BLOI OUT DISEASE IN ITS BARLY STAGES

The disease commences with a slight derange ment of the stomach, but, if neglected, it in time ment of the stomach, but, if neglected, it in time involves the whole frame, embracing the kid-neys, liver, pancreas, and, in fact, the entire grandular system; and the afflicted drags out a miserable; existence until death gives. re-lief from suffering. The disease is often mis-taken for other complaints; but ff the reader will ask, himself the following questions he be able to determing, whether he himself is one of the afflicted :- Have I chistrets, pain or difficulty in breathing, after eating ? If there a dull, heavy felling; attended by drows: ness? Have the even, wellow times. Does ness? Have the eyes a yallow tings? Does a thick, sticky mucous gather about the gums and teeth in the mornings; accompanied by a disagreeable taste? Is the tongue coated ? Is a fullness about the sides and back? Is there a fullness about the right side as if the liver were enlarging? Is there costiveness? Is there vertigo or dizziness when rising suddenly from an horizontal position ? Are the secre tions from the kidneys highly colored, with a deposit after standing? Does food ferment soon after eating, accompanied by flatulence or belching of gas from the stomach? Is there frequent palpitation of the heart? These various symptoms may not be present at one time, but they tormant the sufferer in turn as the dreadful disease progresses. If the case be one of long standing, there will be a dry, hack-ing cough, attended after a time by expectora-tion. In very advanced stages the skin tion. In very advanced stages the skin assumes a dirty brownish appearance, and the bands and feet are covered by a cold sticky perspiration. As the liver and kidneys become more and more iseased, rheumatic pains appear, and the usual treatment proves entirely una vailing against the utter sgonising disorder. The origin of this malady is indigestion or dyspepsia, and a small quantity of the proper medicine will re-move the disease if taken in its incipiency. It is most important that the disease should be promptly and properly treated in its first stages, when a little medicine will effect a cure, and even when it has obtained a strong hold the correct remedy should be persevered in until every vestige of the disease is eradicated, until the vestige of the disease is eradicated, until the appetite has returned, and the direstive o pan. restored to a healthy condition. The surest and most effectual remedy for this distressing com plaint is "Seigel's Curative Syrup." a vegetable preparation sold by all chemists and medicine vendors throughout the world, and by the pro-prietors, A. J. White, Limited, Lendon, E.C. This Syrup strikes at the vory foundation of the disease, and drives it, root and branch, out of the system. Ask your chemist for Seigel's Curative Syrup. Curative Syrup.

2

The people of Canada speak confirming the above.

RICHMOND CORNERS, N.B., Jan. 10, 1886. Richnord Converse, N.B., Jan. 10, 1856. Dear Sir., — I wish to inform you the good your Seigel's Syrup has done new I thought at one time I would be better dead than alive, but had the luck to find one of your alimances and after reading it concluded to try your remody. I tried one bottle and found my health so much im-proved that I continued it until now I feel like a new man. I have taken altogether 5 bottles. Everybody here speaks well of it. JOSEPH WARD¹

JOSEPH WARD Rich nond Corners, N.B.

SPRINGFIELD, N.B., Oct. 15, 1835:

+

STRVENSVILLE, WELLAND Co., ONT., Feb. 17, 1884.

A. J. WHITE, I commenced using the "Shaker Extract" in my family a short time since. I was then afflicted with a sick headache, weak stomach, pain in my left side, often attended with a cough, but am now fast gain-ing may health; my seighbors are also astonished at the results of your medicine. Yours, etc.,

ddicine. Yours, etc., Manassen E. Beam.

FREDERICTON, N.B. A. J. Write, Limited, Gentlemen-Your medicine has done more for me for the than any doctor ever did, and I would not be without hood.

Yours truly SATRICE MCLOSET.

TROUT LAKE, ONT., MBy 12, 1885. J. WHITE, Limited.

"I am sure there is no jealousy, father," said Louis D'Arcy; "but Ham not guite so sure about there being no preference. if Mary's case."- rode up with Mr. and Mrs. Hutchi n_the two latter in their own carriage, the former following on horsela-k with Frank Hutchin: on, Lucy's only brother.

son, Lucy's only brother. Mr. Hutchinson was a good type of the man of his class, tall, strongly built, with a great head of curly gray hair, bronzed, hard features, dark, restless eyes, that expressed in quick succession wrath, fierce resolution, and great goodness and kindliness. He had a commanding air about him that impressed all beneath him with respect. But with all his natural fieriness and imperiousness, he was more loved than feared by his dependants. He was never known to forsake a triend, to betray a secret, to go back of his word, or to flinch from the consequences of his own pri-vate conduct or political principles. He was wrong in some things, extreme in many, and honest in all. He was an ambitions man, though not one who could ever sacrifice hus conscience to his ambition. He neglected his own domestic affairs, the government of his large household and the management of his estate, to what he called the public welfare—which meant in reality the interests of his party in Congress. For, the clever men who lead in politica always know how to use the honest zeal and conscientious convictions of their followers for their own selfish ends.

Mrs. Hutchinson, a refined, sensitive, deli-cate woman, with a warm and faithful heart, was much loved and much trueted by her husband, but not much feared by her numerous slaves, who played upon her natural gentleness of disposition, and profited by her weak health to have things pretty much their own way. Frank, her only son, was a young man of splendid physique and rare natural abilities. But Mr. Hutchinson's continual absence from home, and his devotion to political matters, having left him but little opportunity or inclination to direct his son's studies or watch his intellectual and moral development, Frank was allowed to grow up without proper culture or wholesome restraint. The overseer on the estate, a clever but unprincipled fellow, taught the boy to drink, and fostered and fed the dreadful propensity as he passed from boyhood to youth. When Frank was sent to grammer school, far away from home, and afterward to college, his fatal passion waxed stronger, as well from the example and encouragement of his asso-'stes, as from the unlimited amount of money the young fellow could command.

Thus did one noxious vice, as it grew up with him, choke or overshadow all the young man's native virtues. He only returned to his home during vacation time, to be the tyrant of his mother and sister, the scourge of the servants, and the scandal of the neighbor-

Mr. Hutchinson, from whom the fond and weak mother concealed the worst features of these excesses, hoped that they would wear away with age; and that once engaged in her wise words of praise to the deserving, the serious business of life, his son and so commanding, with that same imperious would form both more honorable as gentleness of hers i sociations and more gentlemanly habits. They were a most These hopes were, indeed, to be realized, as we shall see, but not through the means contemplated by the over-indulgent parent. To his sister Lucy, many years his younger, Frank Hutchinson had, up to the moment at which we meet them both, been a terror and a shame. The child inherited the great qualities of both her parents, together with her mother's sensitiveness and weakly disposition. At the age of nine her brother, in a half-tipsy freak, forced her to ride with him on horseback across the swollen Tselica, and, as the frightened animal that bore them missed his footing in mid-stream, both Frank and Lucy were only saved from drowning by a miracle. From the effects of this accident Lucy did not recover for several years. The shock and the long exposure to the icy-cold water brought on a slow fever, with pneumonia. This, with the constant unhappiness caused to her mother by Frank's ill-conduct, preyed fearfully on the little girl's spirits and retarded her growth. She was only saved from the most fatel consequences by the friendship of Mrs. D'Arcy, and by Rose's sisterly care of her. Indeed the warm affection which bound to each other the two ladies, was, after her husband's unfailing love, Mrs. Hutchinson's great happiness in life. And Rose D'Arcy's presence was to Lucy as necessary as the unlight to the flower.

great qualities. Mr. D'Arcy retained in both of his the hands of his boy, preasing them with a warmth what Gaston well understood "You too here, you mountain sprite " wirmth what Gaston well understood bourth not a syllable was uttered by either. Meanwhile the whole group of parents and children were mixed up on the favorite. "I am jealons of Lucy was with him a grout favorite. "I am jealons of Lucy, grandpaps, "Field to rootive the coveted carones. "No! my little-girls are never jealous of anybody," said their grandfather. "There

"No! my little girls are never jealous of am at your service, my dear," said Mr. anybody," said their granifather. "There D'Aroy to his daughter in 'aw, as he took her is no jealousy where there is no preference, is there, my little Mary?" he continued giving there, my little Mary?" he continued giving a double share to this youngest and most son, must take care of Mrs. de Beaumont. 'S There are a subject to the source of Mrs. de Beaumont.

to look after my dear Gertrude." "He is well accustomed to that, paps," re-sponded the lady.

"And always finds the care a new delight," While the centlemen were shaking hands put in her hushand, as he looked admiringly with the venerable hero of the day, Gaston, on the still beautiful woman he had learned are as bis wife.

The table was so arranged that the older people were seated on one side of the table and the young folks on the other. Thus, Ross sat immediately opposite to her grandfather, with her cousin Duncan on one hand and Frank Hutchinson on the other, Lucy be ing between Gaston and Duncan.

As Mr. D'Arcy reached his place at the center of the table, the color came to his face and his eyes were lit up with a flash of pleasure, as they rested on the exquisite Japanese bowl with its brilliant burden of lilies. "It is all Rose and Lucy's doings," whispered Mrs. D'Arcy, as the old gentleman conveyed to both his thanks with a warm smile. Then, as was his wont, giving a rapid and rapt look upward and around him on his assembled children and the sunlit scene outside, he reverenfly bent his head, invoked a brief and fervent blessing on the bountiful board before them and on all present there, and they began with a right good will to do justice to Mrs. D'Aroy's royal breakfast. Of what occurred during this repast and of the incidents which followed, we shall entertain the reader in the next chapter.

CHAPTER 11. FEASTING IN MAYTIME.

"We went Down thro' the park ; strange was the sight to me ; For all the sloping pasture murnur'd, sown With happy faces and with holiday."

They were a most happy company who at down around Mary D'Arcy's hospitable board. Nor to judge from the radlant countenances of the numerous colored servants, who stood there marshalled under Rodrigo Gomez, the major domo, Francis D'Arcy's old and trusty Portuguese servant, was there less of heartielt joy among the dependants than among the members of the fam-ily. Slaves there were none on Francis D'Arcy's estate, nor among the many colored people employed by him in his factories. Brought up with care, every one of them, educated under the special direction of the ladies of the family, and bound to their law. master and employer by uniform and unvary. "I fear," remarked her husband, "that ing kindness, these simple souls loved him and his sincerely, and served them devotedly.

Moreover, Mis. D'Arcy had exacted strict order and discipline from all those attached to her household. She knew that domestic comfort depended on giving the servants pre- country needed my services." cisely what each could do well, and in seeing "Except in fighting the that it was well done, and at the proper time. Her house did in truth resemble a bee-hive, in which there was no loud none being so active and energetic as the i diana." queen-bee hersels, and no one going about her many dution with a more quiet step or a lower voini

And they all loved to obey such a mistress, and vied with each other in pleasing her, so beautiful was she, so gentle, so winning with her wise words of praise to the deserving, together, there-that blessed family and their friends, and that array of shining black faces that stood around, ready and anxious to minister to their slightest wish.

strength, which lay at the bottom of his many growth. But I believe that the American industry which has given the matter of Fairy inhabitants of Fairy Dell and neighborhood, will not forego the pleasure of honoring in you a living benefactor-though we shall slao be careful not to forget the honored dead.

"Ross and Lucy say, dear father," put in Mrs. D'Arcy, "that they are willing to be answerable to the charge of worshipping the the living. How is it, Lucy?"

"It was all my fault," said Miss Hutchinson. "Rose had made wreaths of immortelles for all the portraits of her sucesturs; but I spoiled them in hanging them up, so palachees. that we had barely enough to make one Weary o wreath, and that I put on Mr. D'Arcy's picture, with the forget-me nots, which were of my choosing."

"And a very appropriate and graceful choice, Miss Lucy," Mr. D'Arcy suid. "Do you know that in the vallies of Southern Tyrol, where the population is mostly Italian, they call the forget me not ' the floweret of St. Lucy'! Has Rose ever told you the story of St. Lucy ?"

"Pray, do not make a Papiat of my little girl," said Mr. Hutchinson to Rose.

"I assure you, sir, 1 never permit myself to speak to her of such things," said Rose, coloring deeply. "Rose has never said one word to me about St. Lucy," replied the little maiden herself, with her characteristic spirit. "I only know what I have read from 'Sacred and Legendary Art' in mamma's library, that St. Lucy is honored in Italy as the patron saint and prctectress of the laboring poor; just what I should like to be."

"Be true to yourself, dear child." said Mr. D'Arcy ; "and you will be the idol alike of rich and poor. By the way, Hutchinson," he continued, "how do the political heavens look in the East ?"

"Squally," replied his friend, with an ominous shake of the head. "I fear the present electoral canvass will push things to extremities."

"Had we not better avoid politics at breakfast, and before our young people ?" asked Mrs. D'Arcy, looking at her father in-we can scarcely conceal from them that there is a dark storm gathering. They can hear the thunder and see the lightning in spite of us." "Nor would you even if you could, moth-er," replied the Major, "especially if my

"Except in fighting the poor Indiane on the plains," answered Mrs. de Beaumont, "I do not know of any service you nave render-ed her. And I think, so far that fighting is noise, but the continual murmur of activity, | concerned, that all the giory was for the In-

> " I'm not far from that opinion myself," added Mr Hutchison. " That is the worst news I have heard in a life time," replied Mr. D'Arcy. "And, as I see that your dear good Aunt Mary is distressed by our introducing politics, we shall ad-journ that subject till after breakfast."

said, " that our boys are apt to go wild when war is spoken of. Even Ga na been mut dead. it is in the second accompanies of the tain alain at Uldbridge, James D'Aroy, or Don Diego D'Arcy, as he was called thence-forth, married into the great Mendoza family, was appointed commander of a Spanish ship of the line, and sent on service to the Gulf of Mexico. There he helped, about 1702, to defeat the attempt made by Moore, the unscrupilous Governer of Carolina, to destroy the colony of St. Augustine, and, having soon afterward lost his wife, he threw up his command in the navy, and settled with his three children on a large and beautiful tract of land which he had purchased among the Ap-

> Weary of his adventurous life, disgusted with the political world in which he had beheld wrong triumphant, justice down-trodden, and expediency become the universal law of State government; saddened, too, by the loss of his country, his patri-monial estates, and a wife whom he idolized, he yearned for solitude, repose, and freedom to his children in the pure stmosphere of a new world, and to teach them by his own example to be the benefactors of their fellow men, far away from the contentions of national animosity, and the scandals of the fierce religious passions that burned in men's breasts on both sides of the Atlantic. The Appalachees among whom he settled revered him, while much of his wealth and all his influence were bestowed in aiding the devoted missicuaries to christianize and civi-I se these rude but high-souled children of the American wilderness Around Don Diego D'Arcy's home, near the site of the modern Tallahassee, a little colony of Europeans soon arcse, the families composing it bring, like the D'Arcys, of gentle blood, of a kindred weligious and political faith, and, like that, seeking for perfect liberty in the modumon and peace of these vast solitudes. All of them deemed it their highest duty to hanor their ancestral faith in the eyes of the heathen native, by spotless purity of life and boundless beneficence.

Of his two daughters one became a member of the Franciscan community of St. Augustine, dying at an early age the victim of her heroic devotion to the spiritual needs of the neighboring Indian tribes, while the other sister became the wife of an Andaluzian noble, and helped to contribute much to the support of missionary enterprise along the shores of the Galf of Mexico.

Gerald, the only son of Diego D'Arcy, in his turn married a Spanish wife, who consented to share her husband's fortunes in the New World. They were indeed checkered fortunes The home which his father had reared near the Wakulia Lake was rathlessly destroyed by the English, and the D'Arcys found a temporary refuge with the friendly Creeks of the Tuscaloss tribe. Most bitter to the souls of both father and son as had been the ruthless destruction of the Appalachee Christian missions, the indiscriminate massacre of their inhabitants, and the slaughter of the missionaries. both heroically resolved to repair, so far as they might, the scandal and disaster of such invasions, made by

"Yeu know, dear father," Mrs. D'Arcy one Christian colony against another. They profited by the friendship in which they were the teaching and zeal for self-improvent: held by the Creeks, to spread among the latter the scholars. some of the most lasting fruits of civilization ; taught them to build more spacious and comfortable dwellings, introduced the plants and seed grains most suited to the climate and country, and distributed among their villages such farming implements as could facilitate field labor. The D'Arcys rendered their Indian friends still mo e important service by protecting them against the unjust attacks of the European colonists, who made war on the natives for the express purpose of reducing them to slavery. To the English settlers of Georgia and Carolina they were also enabled to be of signal service on more than one occasion. Governor Oglethorps held them, and deservedly, in great esteem. Geraid D'Arcy sided the latter not a little in defeating Mon teano's invasion in 1740. Thenceforward Gerald and his family were but little ennoyed on account of their Jacobitism or their religion. They never obtruded their principles or their creed upon their neighbors, while remaining unalterably attached to both. Gerald and his wife were most careful to bestow on their children's education all the pains they could. The father taught his sons-there were three of them-all that he had himself learned from his parent and the best European masters ; and his wife was no less devoted to the training of her two decorating the breakfast room, especially the his grandson. "No matter who is elected daughters in all the branches that were then considered parts of a lady's education. And both boys and girls were accustomed from growth. But I believe that the American heart is as hespitable and fulltula's soil for the noble scatiments and the customs which embody them, a sour climat's is favorable to the growth of these most rare and magui-ficent productions of the vegetable world," "Well, then, let us see what is the benefit if." replied the old gentleman," But shed so to consistent us the presence of the stranging bedded dynasty, remaining faithful to "I did not say that I wished so to consistent us. "I did not say that I wished so to consistent us. "I the ancient ritual of the Christian Empire, which had force of 1 lying among the oritic titles or distinctions marines for the visit to the visit which has force of 1 lying among the for the Christian Empire, which had force of 1 lying among the oritic titles or distinctions marines for the visit to the visit which has force of 1 lying among the for the Christian Empire, which had force of 1 lying among the for the Christian Empire, which had force of 1 lying among the for the Christian Empire, which had force of 1 lying among the for the Christian Empire, which had force of 1 lying among the for the Christian Empire, which had force of 1 lying among the for the Christian Empire, which had force of 1 lying among the for the chail of the observed a home, partitic some of his boothers, and some profination of the prosent the introduction the field the to the visit of the vis had preferred an early claim. But the m be satisfies a several accories of cabinet a inlast work: As from the beginning, the D'Arcy's h been most stremuous in resisting all efforts reduce the indiana' to bondage, so they h been consistent in opposing the introduct which he enjoyed in his mountain home employing such labor as he preferred, was chief reason of his predilection for the plan And his fatherly love for every man And his fatherly love for every one of those who looked up to him, the rare the he had of employing every individual in the work best suited to his capacity and including tion, and his generosity in compensating laborer for his labor, diffused satisfact Through all classes of his workmen. He divided his finest arable lands among tami who preferred farming, providing them in beginning with prepared wood for their bages and cutbuildings, with farming in ments at what they had cost himself, with seed grain at a mere nominal price. gratuitonely when the biginners could gratuitonely when the biginners could afford to pay at all for it. To farmers r'sected on the lands adjacent to his own was scarcely less liberal. Thereby he secu to his mechanics and their families a ch and abundant supply of provisions the wh year round, while the farmers themselves a ready market at their very dcors. To the free colored men and a of the more civilized Cherokees, who is not migrated with their tribe beich the Mississippi, he assigned the to of selecting carefully the timber of for manufacture, of felling hauling a sawing it. They formed a class apart; h comfortable cottager, surrounded, each, b few acres of good land, where their iam enjoyed privacy and independence. The tory hands were provided for with the wise and fatherly generosity. There a schools in which the children were tauged competent persons, who received a m salary, a handsome residence, and a see share of regard from the master and family. The Protestant portion of tnese ha toilers had a neat church and regular cle attendance. The Catholics, who were in amall minority, met for worship in am chapel near the Manor House, were viz monthly by a clergyman from one dr neighboring cities, and, in the intervalcy visits, were left to the ministrations of and Mrs. D'Arcy, who saw to it that not remained ignorant of the great Chris truths, or uncomforted during illness of tress, or deprived of the help to a h death when the supreme hour was at har In Fairy Dell, therefore, and amon population that centered around it, then happiness, order, plenty, peace, don virtue-the love of labor and the love of man for his brother-because there was rect liberty for all of obeying the dicta conscience, and of striving after what deemed best, without any dispositis dictate to others what they should or ma not believe. Mrs. D'Arcy had the supreme contra the little school for the children of here faith. As Rose grew up to womande however, she was allowed by her mother superintend everything. Indeed, shead sisters were, not unfrequently, oblight sole teachers as well ; and right exceller. most zealous teachers they made. Som lar, however, was Miss D'Arcy amon classes of her grandfather's laborers and antry, that the Protestant teachers, looked up to her for guidance and encor ment. But she and her mother neverit fered in any matter relating to religion, fining themselves to securing excellent

SEPT. 1, 1886.

J. WHITE, Limited. Gentlemen-Your medicine is just what is needed here for disordered liver, When I was in London, the doctors there said I was a "gone man," and advised me to traveL. I did so. and came across Seigel's Syrup, which cured me entirely by continued use, which proved that sometimes the best of skill is not always the only hope. Yours truly, W. J. ROBERTSON, Evangelist.

ALBERT BRIDGE, N.S., May 16, 1585.

J. Wittrs, Limited. Gentlemen-1 am now using Selgel's Syrap for Dyspepsia, and find it to be the best medicine I ever used for that complaint. It is a priceless boon to any one afflicted with indigestion.

Yours truly WM. BURKE.

Sourni Bay, Ont., Dec. 7, 1885. Sir.—I take great pleasure in informing you that I have been cured by your Siegel's Syrup and pil's. I suffered ton or twelve years with indigestion and con stipation of the bowels, vomiting food and bile from the stomach, which caused great palm. I tried several good physicians, none of whom were able to give me any relief. I tried several patent medicines, some of them giving relief to the time being. so you can gasly see that I

I tried several patent medicines, some of them giving rollef for the time being, so you can easily see that I was discouraged, and it was withittic faith that I commenced to take your Seigel's Syrup all pills I started with your medicine about one year ago and have taken in all about 2 dozen bottles, it did take some little time to stop the vomiting, but I can say that now my health is greatly improved. I will cheerfully recommend it to all suffering from stomach complaints. I can give you the names of several others if yo visb.

You may print this if you wish, a it may be acans of helping some other sufferer. LEWIS WALBANS.

Z South Bay, Ontario. Proprietors : A. J. White (Limited), 17 Far-ringdon Road, London, Eng. Branch office : 67 St. James street, Montreal.

For sale by every druggist in Montreal.

EVICTIONS IN IRELAND.

DUBLIN, August 22 .- Evictions at Gweedore, in the district of Donegal, have been concluded. The total amount of rents concerned does not exceed £50 yearly. There were 150 policemen and bailiffs and sixty cars and boats engaged for eleven days in the proceedings, at a cost of £100 a day. The scenes were pitiful, the people being steeped in poverty.

NERVOUS DEBILITATED MEN.

You are allowed a free trial of thirty days of the use of Dr. Dye's Celebrated Voltaic Belt with Electric Suspensory Appliances, for the speedy relief and permanent cure of Nervous Debility, loss of Vitality and Manhool, and all kindred troubles. Also, for many other diseases. Complete restoration to health, vigor and manhood guaranteed. No risk is incurred. Illustrated pamphlet, with full information, etc., mailed free by ad dressing Voltaic Belt Co., Marahall, Mich,

THE GOVERNMENT'S OPPOSITION. LONDON, Aug. 21.-In the Commons last night Churchill announced that the Govern ment would oppose all notices of motion and private member's bills in order to prolong the session. Labouchere occasioned laughter by asking if the Government would agree to refer such bills to a loyal Commission.

A Most Liberal Offer.

THE VOLTAIC BELT Co., Marshall, Mich., offer to send their Celebrated VOLTAIO BELTS and Electric Appliances o thirty days' trial to any man afflicted with Nervous depillity, Loss of Vitality, Manhood, &c. Illustrated pamphlet in scaled envelope with full particulars, mailed free Write them at once.

Such were the neighbors Fairview sent to Fairy Dell on that bright May morning. As Mr. Hutchison sprung lightly from his carriage, and helped his pale, but lovely companion out, Mrs. D'Arcy and Rose hastened to welcome her.

"Well, my patriarch of the hills !" exclaimed the Congressman, as he flew up the steps of the porch ; "may we see you as erect and fresh as this, ten years hence ! you see, my wife would not wait till dinnertime to present you in person her congratula. tions.'

"I know of old all Mrs. Hutchinson's goodness," replied Mr. D'Arcy, advancing and welcoming heartily the lady herself; "as well as I have proved her husband's truth and friendship." "That is the most precious compliment I have received in my life," said Hutchinson, as he again shook his friend's hand.

"And I know it is a well-deserved compli-ment," added Mrs. D'Aroy. "Dear father means even more than he says."

"Ab, Frank, how tell we've grown !" said Mr. D'Arcy, as young Hutchinson came up to present his respects. "You will soon outstrip Gaston if you continue." "They are of nearly the same age," said

Frank's motuer; "only six months difference, I believe."

The difference in stature and character between the two young men was soon apparent enough, as Gaston hastened toward his grandfather, seized the outstretched hand, and kissed it again and again, with a reverence and a fervor that struck all present. Mr. D'Arcy, however, was well-accustomed to such demonstrations of filial piety from his favorite grandson.

Favorite, assuredly, he deserved to be, that splendid specimen of young manhood, taller a good deal than Frank Hutchinson, taller even than his father and grandfather, wonderfully like these in features and expression, and reflecting on his broad brow

" Don't you think, Mrs. Hutchinson, ' Mr. D'Arcy asked of the lady at his right hand, ' that Lucy is improving wonderfully ? See how bright she looks."

sun," said his daughter-in-law ; "they gathered all these flowers on the table ; and went | a host. down to Fairy Island to cull these beautiful liles.

"Don't praise me for it, mamma," ex " It claimed Lucy from across the table. was all Rose's doing, and she was only forced to let me be with her."

"Grandpapa," answered Rose, "she in-sisted on gathering for you the first water-lily. That splendid blue Australian lily is dear Lucy's offering to you." "And it shall be preserved by me in

D'Arcy. "Lucy, you must yourself place and press it in my album, with your name and the date."

"Oh, thank you, dear Mr. D'Arcy," said the delighted girl. "That will be a reward I" "I believe Lucy did more than that," Mrs. D'Arcy added. "If Rodrigo has not misin-" They are preparing for war formed me, she has had the principal share in family portraits."

"I have only one fault to find with your work, my little fairy," said Mr. D'Arcy, glanc-ing around him. "That is that you have paid more honor to the living than to the dead." Now Mr. D'Arcy's portrait was placed between that of his futher and mother, and was surrounded by a double wreath of immortelles, roses, and forget-me-nots, while two angels held a crown of oak, laurel, and olive leaves over the portrait it laurel, and olive leaves over the portiant in may never find in arms against him in the ex-self. The wreaths and sparse hangings that the girls had added here and there to the the girls had added here and ceiling, only whose veins runs the blood of the D'Arcys," served to bring into greater relief the rich | said his grandfather, solemnly. tints of the wainscotting and of the elegant and massive furniture.

"I am delighted that my little girl has bestowed on living worth a double and treble wreath of honor," said Mr. Hutchinson. "You are the creator of Fairy Dell and its prosperity.

whisper, young Joe Porter, who stood behind Mr. Hutchinson s chair. "Yes, that is so !" repeated Mr. Hutchin-

"All our people, white and colored, 80n. love to say it."

Mr. D'Arcy, who had been rather startled by Joe Porter's voice-for Joe was exceedingly modest and quiet-only smiled at the boy's affectionate earnestness, and at the deeper color that now overspread his handsome black features, "Ah, but, friend Hutchinson," he said, "we must not depart from the good old paths."

"Nay," said the other, "to honor the ing, that in so doing they honored the dead still more."

"Ah, my patriarch, that is one of your outlandish theories, which won't take root here, said Hutchinson, laughing.

before me, from America, India, and Aug. the history of the D'Arcy family, as well at ting on a more martial air of late. And the other day I stumbled on him as he was admiring himself in a suit of old regimentals belonging to yourself." "Old indeed," said Mr. D'Arcy, with a hearty laugh, " they saw service with me in 1812 on the Canadian frontier."

There was much merriment smong the "She and Rose were up long before the young people at poor Gasten's expense. But he was one who could hold his own against

> " Mother has been rather hard on me," he said. "But 1 think that, in a pinch, I could still wear those old regimentals and not disgrace the name of D'Arcy in them."

> "I am sure," said Major de Beaumont, " that you will always honor every uniform you wear and every cause you fight for."

"Pray, don't talk of fighting, my dear Gustave," said Mrs. D'Aroy; "I know your mother would rather have you at home "And it shall be preserved by me in just now, than flying about the country at memory of the day and the giver," said Mr. the bidding of the Secretary of War"

"Gustave has his father's Franch blood in him," said that gentleman's mother ; "I could never keep him at home." "How is it with you in Charleston and New Orleans, Gustave ?" said Mr. D'Arcy,

"They are preparing for war with the utmost activity and determination," answered president, they are determined to secede from the Union

"Well," said the Msjor, "if the Govern-ment,-that is, the next President,-wishes to prevent secession by force of arms, we shall have war as sure as we are sitting here. And what remains of the government army with whatever volunteers the Executive may called to his aid, will find other foes than Indians in their path."

"I hope the President of the United States

"You may be sure, sir," replied the soldier, that no one will ever meet them on any road that is not the road of honor."

"Well, my dear Gustave, we shall not discuss that topic here. I see that our little Mary is looking around anxiously, as if she would find some means of escape from the "That's so, massa," said, in a half. breakfast room. And, I fancy that her sisters and all our young people are impatient to be abroad."

"Our people are already beginning to fill the lavn," said Mr. Louis D'Arcy, " and, as the ladges must have their hands full all day, we had not better detain them here any longer.

And so, they all rose. Mr. D'Arcy returned thanks, the ladies, under Mrs. D'Arcy's direction, took charge of the vast preparations necessary for the entertainment of the hundreds of mer, women and children who were to be Mr. D'Aroy's guests on that day, while the gentlemen sat on the broad "Nay," said the otner, to unter veranda and discussed what was uppermose living is as ancient as the world." veranda and discussed what was uppermose "True," replied Mr. D'Arcy; "but the in their minds, the progress of the scossion movement in the slave States, and the corresponding increase of activity and bitter denunciation among the Republican party in the Eastern and Western States.

Before giving a detailed account of this It was his his own creation, and so were the discussion and of its results for some of our thrifty industries his wise patriotism had fos-"It is, indeed, like these beautiful flowers most interesting personages, let us glance at tered in the neighborhood.

childhood to be the instructors of the Indian children around them.

Thus were the descendants of Diego D'Arcy brought up in the hatred of all forms of tyranny and the enthusiastic love of freedom in all its most hallowed forms, till the Revolutionary War of 1775 called them to espouse the cause of the American colonists against the home govern-ment. They struggled hard, but in vain, to bind the Indians to the cause of popular rights. In the war their home was again destroyed, this time by the allied Creeks and English, and one of Gerald's grandsons fell mortally wounded in defending it. Another perished at a later period in the war, while resisting the royal forces in South Carolina, and the survivor-the father of our venerable acquaintance, Francis D'Arcy-continued to devote his life and his fortune to the struggle for independence, rendering more important service by his wise counsels than even by his bravery in the field,

While quite a boy Francis was in the habit of accompanying a Cherokee chief, devotedly attached to his family, into the mountainous tracts of Northwestern Carolina, where the Mendozas, his ancestors, had owned and worked some gold mines, and where the friendly Cherokees bestowed on James D'Arcy the younger a large tract of land as a reward for some signal services done their

Of this tract, however, Francis D'Arcy only retained a very small portion, and even for this he paid an equitable price to the Federal government. The old home, which he still maintained and cherished on the spot selected by his ancestor, continued to be the both were taken into the breakfatt¹⁰⁰ winter residence of the family; but he him. given refreshment. Meanwhile threa self ever showed a predilection for Fairy Dell.

To some of the ancient Spanish gold mines and in his deep brown eyes the innocence and trains, a most beautiful thing of foreign the originand nature of the manufacturing in one of the adjacent counties, the D'Arcys the invisible spririts that haunted the

Whenever there was sickness or unha

ness in any home, then was the notle with her daughters unwearied and unp of self so long as the suffering lasted.

As for Louis D'Arcy and his oldes they seemed only their venerable pr right and left hand in executing to ter's manifold's plans for his reevery best interest. And these good ; themselves united the three gentless one warm sentiment of the most m and respectful affection. There was, front of the little chapel attached Mansion House, a second lawn, scarcely extensive than that which fronted thed ing itself, and equally well cared for which the people were free to assemble festive occasions and holidays to a themselves with various maply games these the gentlemen of the family variably took a part, while the women looked on or had pleasant sports of own, or went round with Mrs. D'Arcy Rose to select for their home-gardens pretty flowers or valuable kitchen plant

Such, then, were the guests whowere ing on that loveliest of May morning to brate Francis D'Arcy's eightieth birthing The farmers had come in their owners ances with their wives and children were assigned the place of honor, in the die, because they had been Mr. Di oldest companions in his explorations, and most efficient aids in forming the settler The factory people came next, and m splendid show with their bright banten wreaths of evergreens and brilliant The lumberers were content to take the place for they knew what place they by their kind master's affections.

John McDuffie, or "Farmer McBu as he was called, himself eighty three of age, and Mr. D'Arcy's earliest comp in his mountain travele, was the fore figure in the first group, unbeat by green, vigorous, and elastic yet, with dimmed eye and steady hand, his whit the only sign so many winters had a their passage over the herculean frame. was the descendant of one of the early S colonists, and bestowed on Mr. D'Ard enthusiastic attachment with which his ancestors had regarded their kings John McDuffie's side, as he stepped up veranda, was another and scarcely stately figure, that of the old Cheroket wassee, also an octogenarian, and the guide and devoted friend of Mr. D'Art his boyhood.

The latter did not wait till they have up to him, but advancing, with evident ure, he seized a hand of each. "I knot you would say, friend John," he broki the cld farmer's intended compliment; you, Hiswassee, you need add no wa what your eyes are telling me, and what whole life has told. Here is Mrs. D'Ard your little favorite, Miss Rose, whe something to say to both of you." And Rose, taking possession of the while her mother warmly welcomed Mil dering cheers were given for Mr. D'Any such a good will that they woke all the such a good will that they woke all is bering echoes of Fairy Dell, and were ed again and again by the precipion wooded heights around Fairy Island,