

Churchill Research Range in Canada on the 16th of August. Scientists from four countries collaborated in furnishing experiments measuring these fields in different and complementary ways. Canada provided range services and payload construction as well as several experiments. This project is a good example of Canada's methods of achieving international cooperation in space research, a method applied in several other cases during the past year including four rockets launched into the path of totality of the solar eclipse of March 7 of this year.