RARE COLLECTION OLD-TIME WEAPONS

Secured by George Kennan in Russia and Loaned to U.S. National Museum.

A remarkable collection of old weapons, secured by George Kennan, a noted writer and traveler, during one of his trips to Russia, has recently been loaned to the United States National Museum by Mr. Kennan and installed in the new building of the museum.

The greater part of the weapons were originally gathered by Prince Skavich, of Russia, a noted collector, from whom Mr. Kennan purchased them a good many years ago.

The collection comprises about fifty-eight objects, and consists of sabres, daggers, yataghans, pistols and guns, all finely mounted, and some having decorative and ethnologic interest on account of the inscriptions they bear, in Russian, Persian, Caucasian, Arabic or Latin.

Some especially attractive weapons, the Turkish and Arab yataghans, which are slightly curved swords with long, curved blades, bearing on one side an inscription of silver inlaid in steel. "God help me to overcome my enemies in the mountains and on the steppes," while on the other side is the figure of a man brandishing a sword over his head; on the other side is the following: "Soli Deo Gloria." The yataghans are decorated with silver gilt and red velvet, with repousse ornamentation.

A sabre having a remarkable history is one in a plain black scabbard with a silver lining, and the following inscription: "Voluntas Mayrechoffer Inossay Anno 1787." This valuable implement is considered to be the most valuable piece of the entire collection and is greatly prized by its owner, on account of the ancient date and probable historical connection with the Crusades.

Another weapon of interest is a Scotch dirk once the property of a member of the Seventy-eighth Highland Regiment, evidently captured during the campaign carried into Central Asia, where it was picked up by Prince Skavich. It is an odd piece of cutlery, having a straight two-edged blade and a short solid grip. The scabbard is decorated with silver gilt and red velvet, with repousse ornamentation. A case for a knife and fork is to be seen on the display, making the implement available for use both for camp and warlike purposes.

Representative of the two-handed swords of the early part of the eighteenth century is one with a cross hilt and two cutting edges. The hilt is of silver, and bears the inscription: "Zar Peter Alexievich, 1710," supposed to be the figure of the emperor, as this name is engraved on the blade.

There are two battle axes in the collection, one with gold inlaid Persian blade and Caucasian niello-work handle, and dated 1820; the other a queer combination of a flint-lock pistol and a hatchet, the latter set on at the muzzle. The stock and handle of the weapon is straight and inlaid with ivory. It is said to be one of old Saxon workmanship.
