terest. In addition to regular enquiries so many have expressed a desire to take night instruction that the principal, J. W. Regan, announces the demand will be met and that the same high class instruction which day pupils receive will be given to those wishing to better their position by evening study.

The necessity of having night schools in the city in other branches of study than telegraphy is amply demonstrated by the urgent demand for night classes in this particular branch. The Veteran School of Telegraphy is to be congratulated on the promptness with which it has met the demand and by its action the management proves itself to be wide awake to the public need and ready to supply it.
