Home of My Childhood.

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead, That never to himself bath said— This is mine own, my native land;" Canada, land of the full wheaten sheaf,

Land of the 'beaver' and green 'maple leaf,'
Land of the forest rude, nome of the free,
Sweet are the charms thou possessest for me;
But dearer than aught of thy soul-stirring wildwood,
To me the sweet dreams of the home of my childhood.

Inspiring the gush of thy torrents that roar, From the steep Petewohweh to lone Labrador; The sound of thy cascades, each soft falling rill May the heart of the tenderly sensitive thrill, But dearer than aught of the torrent or wildwood To me the loved scenes in the home of my childhood

Majestic the roll of thy waters that pour From Niagara's clift—dashing headlong and hoar, Sublime and impressive, it holds in control—In papt admiration, the awe-stricken soul; Yet, far less endoring the thrift of its wildwood, Less dear to my heart than the home of my childhood

Huron, Erie, Superior, Ontario too, Low pure are your waters, how deep and blue, Aye, pure are the tides of your circling domains Ever watting the wealth a rich commerce sustains Your grandeur my spirit detain for a while would But grander the scenes in the home of my childhood

Land of the Maple, thy forests on high How wave they sublime in the clear blue sky, How bright are the bues of their emerald tresse How varied the notes of their sylvan recesses; But dearer than aught of thy music or wildwood

Fair are thy fields when sweet vernal winds blow And rich are the treasures the harvests bestow, Yet fairer the land of the oat-laden dell, Land of the daisy and sweet heather bell; Air, fairer than aught of the glade or the wildwoo More dear to my heart is the home of childhood.

Canada, infant but fast growing nation Onward and upward how marked thy progression— The spread of thy churches and chaste moral rules, The healthful improvement and growth of thy schools How rising in power from the depths of the wildwood Yet, O how unlike thee sweet home of my childhood

Yes, unlike to thee, thou sweet Albion isle; How I long once more to bask in thy smile to inhale with the sweets of the pure bracing air The spirit thrice purer of piety there; God-garing, religious, stern rouged isle rude Pride of the ocean thou home of my childhood.

Land of intelligence, bonor and law both, Land of the 'parish school', land of the Sabbath, Land of the 'Thistle' high waving in pride, Land where the brave-hearted heroes reside, Land where the banners of freedom float in mood.
Can'l ever torget thee, thou home of my childhood

Plympton, April 25th, 1864.

ODD PAPERS ON THINGS IN GEN ERAL.

SANDY M'INTYRE IN GLASGOW FAIR. Mattie, Mattie, woman, put on yer spen-er, an' let us into the toon an' see the fair. Sie a place as yon, woman, ye never be held in a' yer born days. Everybody seems turned out intil the streets-faithers, young sters, matrons, maidens, and auld wives. There's a sunbeam in every face, and a heart in everybodie's haund, woman, that beats in year loof like an electric battery. Everybody seems to be on the best of terms with everybody else. This is the time o year when rippets should be southered, when broken friendships should be mended. I'm quite sure, guidwife, everybody could shake haunds wi' everybody, and begin life wi' clear scores. If ever you and I leeve to wi ye tae, woman; put on his Sunday things, and buy the callant a cane, for I could toss aboot bawbees like chucky stanes. Ye can leave Leesock to play wi' the M'Clintocks. Gie her that penny for 'glessie,' puir thing, and let beirns and big folk alike feel the general elevation.

Sandy M'Intyre was a suburb wabster o' honorable reputation, and the very warst that could be said o' him was that he was that aye kept his ain family in guid regulatup to everybody. Such being Sandy's character, it is but right to think that he was maister in his ain hoose, and so he was for Mattie cuist aside her wheel and her pirns, nor needed a second bidding, and soon Sandy, Mattie, and Jock were jaundying aboot, particles in the giddy waves of human life, that had lifted up their heads to witness the wonders o' the Fair. "It's a terrible thing human life, Mattie life, at a fair, whaure, as oor minister says ye see it in a' its phases." "Ay, an' the sweetie stauns, its tremen-

"Guidwife ! guidwife ! There noo, that's nac less than the third time ye had maist been trampet tae death by the wheels o' an omnibus, ye maun look aboot ye woman, the horses were on the verra selvages of yer carpet shoon."

"Hey, mither! gies a bawbee. Here's far better blackman than Jean M'Phail mak's for a' she puts in the daurk sugar." "Whisht! ye thoughtless loon. Never mind him Mattie."

"Ay, but I has gotten a piece o't an' the man wants the bawbee,"

"Oh! the tricky vagabon; gie him a ha'penny, Sandy, and let him pay his debt." "Weel, I declare, an' if yonner's no an auld fuil dancing the Heelland fling in the front of you show."

"Tut, woman, what are you blethering about, that's a wax work. That's whare they fecht the battle o' Alma wi' wooden sodgers. Youner's something worth looking at though; yonner's a hornpipe on a sklate stane; do ye hear the clinking o' his heels ; yon's able work for yes." Faither, here's a man wantin' me to play a game at rowly-powly, but it takes a ha'penny; will I play or no, faither?"

Jock was cuffed and admonished to hold on by Mattie's apron string.

"Hey! hey! this way for making money, fortunes in half an half. This way."
Sandy and Mattie turned aside, there was a wee stan' wi' a dozen people, an' a man gaan through a wheen of strange ma-nœuvres with thimbles on a kind o' a tray

"I'll wager a shilling you don't find the pea," said the man, putting' it manifestly under ane o' the thimbles.

"Done!" cried Saudy, pressing his thumb on the tap o' the ane wi' the pea in it. "There! ye'll no deceive me, my man." The little man grinned knowingly at Sandy, and threw down the shilling, while Mattie clappet her husband on the back an' vowed it was botter than weaving. The man shifted the thimbles again.

"Anither shilling?" the little man nod-ded, and Sandy lifted a thimble triumphantly. There was a titter among the croud; Sandy's confidence had led him as-

"Try again," said the little man after depositing the pea and arranging the thim-

"Double it, Sandy; double it, the pea's under that bruised thimble, as sure's a gun. I watched him slippin't in."
"Yer right, Mattis, Twa shillings this time, guid man." Sandy lifted the bruised thimble, but there was no and the continued.

thimble, but there was not pen, and the confident man's counterance fell.

"Come back frac it. Simply; the deil has a y; the deil has a k, for I saw him lable wi' my ain under the same as much in halfhand in that tray, oput the pea under een; it's no can me'll no play at the pea and thumble for twa days again."

"Preserve us ! where's the callant?" "Oh faither, faither !" cried Jock, sud dealy stepping out from the croud, "a big lout o' a loon has rin aff wi' my ha'penny worth o' blackman. Oh dear; he just snap-pith it frae me;" and the tears fell from Jock's een like grossets.

"Serve ye richt, ye silly thing, ye micht hae keepit in better company; but I see auld an' young gang astray thegither—it has been losing game wi' us a'. Keep close tae yer mither, youngster; the fair's no a canny place. There's the wax-work, where they keep Hawkie and Mrs. M'Lachlan; and yonner's Sir William Wallace, staum'ng second atween the pillars wi' a muckle swird in his haund. Here's twa tum'lers dancing on the tieht-rope. "Ay, pity me! and yonner's some savages That'll be the way they torture the niggers in America."

"Oh Mattie, Mattie! yon's monkeys wi' frocks on; that's the menageric frac the West Indies, woman! There's where they tak' the liknesses ye saw in Mr. M'Intosh's

"My patience, what's yon? What sort ' a potlid is you that make's sicean din ?" "The show's skaling, Mattie; come owre and see what it's like.

"Hey! hey! only one penny. The greatest wonder in the fair; the whole science of electricity explained and developed, together with the workings of the centrifugal railway, as seen by the Emperor of France, and the Royal Family in London, rheumatisms cured, and nervousness removed by one application—only a penny!" Here followed the beating of a gong, the grinding of an organ, and the blaring of a trumpet for the next five minutes. When the noise ceased a consultation was held and Sandy, Mattie, and Jock determined to see the wonders, o' the electric telegraph.
"Guid sake, Mattie, what's this? Police,

Sandy had led the way up the gangway, and, to help him seized the iron rod on either side, but singularly enough, wasna' able to et go the grip. "What's wrang, man; there's naebody middlin' ye; gang up decently, and no mak a fuil o' yerse!'.

Here, again, the trumpet blared, the gong sounded, and the organ ground, and every eye in the fair was turned on Sandy who still held the iron rods and writhel tremendously.

Mattie was getting alarmed, so was Jock, and both began to cry frightfully for the police, when the manager o' the show threw off the current, and Sandy drew off his hands and looked at them, while the people laughed.

"Doun the stair this instant, Mattie, doun wi' ye; we'll no visit that slauchterhouse, see the millenium, tak' my word for't it'll be I'se warrant; down instantly," and the when the fair an' its accompanying amithe hale year. Pling on yer spences, Mat. vation. The manager followed, and offered house. Having purchased a very heavy tie, an' let us intil the fair. Bring Jock a free admission, but Sandy said he had stock in the cheapest market he will take What gart ye roar?" said Mattie, a

Sandy hurried up the Sautmarket. "Never in yer life let me bear ye speaking the matter aboon yer breath, but pray carnestly that ye may never come intil sic

Sandy, Mattie, and Jock had done wi' the fair, and they set their faces earnestly towards the suburbs. Sandy's faith as well a ceevil hard-workin' discreet kind o' a man, as his nerves were considerably shaken, though he was heard to say after he returnion and held a front too smooth for scandle ed, that if they could manage to keep up the spirit o' the fair throughout the whole year, without the practice o' thae abominable tricks, he had nae doot they might leeve in a kind o' a Millenium time after a'.
