Garnish with Discretion By Mary L. Oberlin

RE you one of the women who thinks that every dish should be garnished? If so you are likely to overdo the matter and often produce a crowded or inharmonious cifect on an otherwise attractive table.

Use judgment and have a reason for garnishing a dish. Even for garnishing a dish. Even following would justify the use of a garnish to make the appearance of the dish attractive and appealing to the appetite, or to add to its food value, Garnishes should not be ined-lake for example the green, prigkly value. Garnishes should not be inco-ible, for example the green, prickly top of a pineapple; incongruous, as dill pickles with a fruit salad, inhar-monious in flavor, as candide pine-apple with cabbage salad, or in color and basic with tomatoes.

Over garnishing is to be guarded against. To use hard cooked eggs, lemon, pickles, and cress or parsley with potatoes and sauce on one dish of §sh shows a lack of judgment. Potato balls or a border of mashed potatoes together with sauce and any potatoes together with sauce and any off the other garnishes would be considered to under garnish than to over garnish.

The Red-Winged Blackbird

HE red-winged or swamp black-HE red-winged or awamp black-bird in its various forms is found all over the United States and the region immediately to the north. While common in most of its range, its distribution is more fees local, mainly on account of its partiality for marshes.
