Mt. MacDonald on left and Sir Donald on right.

I'm just an ordinary, everyday working woman. That I earn my living with a fountain pen and a typewriter, rather than with a fine needle and sewing machine, or a woolly cloth and a pail of suda, is an accident of temperament. I get just as tired semetimes acraping up thoughts and putting them into sentences as the other woman does who have a seed to be provided the wrinkles in the brown as every series of the property of the provided like wrinkles in the brown as every series. But this summer I had a holidar, I've had them before, but they've taken me to towns that wre bigger and dirtier and more bedisenedly sophisticated than my own. I've come back see many dollars poorer, not a pound heavier, and, if I brought me montes home with me, they were bedy-wearshee, not anothelight history. At home I'm reckoped a fairly good walker.
