SAM JONES ON MARRIAGE.

The story of Two Typical Young Men and What They Came To.

I can't see, to say my life, why young ladies behave much after the dancing and frivolous minded young men of the country. You can bring a sound, sensible, church-going young man out, and by his side a full fledged dude, and tell nine girls out of ten to take their choice, and they will pick the dude eleven times out of ten. I have seen a dude start down the road and seen one hundred girls look after him, and I never saw such running in all my life. Here is a young man clerking. We will say he gets $40 a month. He is a magnificent sort of peripatetic, perfumed young man. You have seen and smelled him too. I know him better by heart than by sight. He dresses like a prince. His opera house bill is $24 a month, his bill about $40, and cigar bill $20, and his livery bill about $20, and his board is about $40 more, for he boards at a first-class place. I can count $200 a month it costs to run that boy, and he is getting only $40. There was one of that sort down in one of our places. He had a big time with the girls. Presently the proprietor found him out, put his hand on the lapel of his coat and said: "Young man, where are you getting the money from to foot all these bills?" He said his step-mother was sending it to him. Whoever heard of a step-mother sending a boy money?
A girl married the young man. Some time afterwards I visit her home. At the table I see a sad, dejected woman about 22 years old. She is introduced to me.
She says nothing, and after dinner the good old mother says: "That is my poor understandable daughter. She married what she thought was a nice young man, but a few months ago he left her. He had some trouble—I never understood exactly what it was—and he has run away."

Let me draw another picture. Here is a little fellow, 17 years old now. He came to town to work as an office boy, with a wool hat and jeans pants; goes to Sunday school and prayer meeting every Wednesday night. He works on, until finally he is put in the store. He still sticks to the wool hat and jeans clothes and belongs to the church. I heard two girls talk about him. "Look at that old thing; now ain't he a sight!" He is the greatest boy I ever saw in my life. Why, he belongs to the church and goes to the prayer meeting. Just look at the old hat and coat! I would not give the tip of my finger for that suit. That young man clerks on. The next thing I know he has been bookkeeper of the concern. He loves God, does right, is plain and unassuming. The next that I hear of him he goes out into the country where he was raised, and marries Mary Smith, one of the plainest and most practical girls in the section. I find him one of the firm, and in ten years more I find that man's name at the head of the firm. He builds an elegant mansion. His wife is one of the best and purest women in the church. And there they are going along in grandeur and beauty. That Mary Smith that married this Mr. Thompson knows where her husband is.

Listen girls. You die by the wool-hat sort. They will take care of you when the spider-legged dudes have left the country.

An interesting story about Gladstone.
An entertaining bit of political personality, a strange series of remarks about Gladstone, came to a focus this week in a couple of actual stories. Many times during the last few years Mr.
Gladstone has been seen in the streets in conversation with ladies who may be, perhaps, most kindly described as of elastic ethics. Whenever a person saw him who was a political enemy, of course, the most exaggerated and vindictive stories were set about. Never for a moment, however, by anybody who really knew the grand old man, were these stories regarded as other than preposterous slanders. Last week a lady who knows Mr. Gladstone and almost reveres him, was assured by a member of Parliament that he had just seen the Premier engaged in one of these startling conversations. The lady refused to believe it, and wrote instantly to Mr. Gladstone himself, mentioning the name of the member who had told her the story and asking him to deny it. The grand old man instantly replied on a postal card that the story was quite true, and that he was sorry that the member was not near enough to hear what passed, for he said he was trying to persuade the girl, whose appearance had won his sympathy, to enter one of Mrs. Gladstone's homes.
I need not add that the lady prizes her postal card as a first-class literary curiosity. The public here is at length convinced of the truth.

"Mr. Timothy Hannafin, bartender at the Grigg House, London, has struck a bonanza. He was the lucky holder of a one-fifth ticket on the number that won the $25,000 prize in the Louisiana lottery." The above paper also contains notice of a girl in London who was struck by lightning, proving the truth of the old adage, that a lightning stroke and a lottery prize are equally scarce strokes of fortune. Another coincidence is that the girl was not killed and the lottery prize turned out to be a hoax.
