CHAPTER IX.

Man's Head and Woman's Heart.

'I write this with deep reluctance for I am aware that it will be a crue blow to your heart. Besides, I realize that his guilt means defeat to my party in the next gubernatorial contest. It is too late for the party to put up another candidate, and the opposition will carry the State with such a majority as must being a blush of shame to the cheek of every Democrat in the land.

'Stephen Belcourt is surely guilty of the crime of murder, and must I surely be convicted at his trial, which begins, I learn, on the third day of November. The evidence against him is so conclusive that the trial is not likely to occupy more than three days How terrible to think that on the sixth of November-that day when he had hoped to be elected to the been sowing wheat, Sally Ann Sims highest office in this State—he should be convicted of a murder most foul and cowardly—the taking of a feeble

'Put him outside the pale of your thoughts and sympathies, Lynette, or think of him only to shudder with abhorrence at his crime. You know him but one week-surely not long enough for his deceitful charms and blandishments to make an indelible impression

When Mr. Lewis came in that day o dinner from the field where he had confided to him that his niece had "s wounded" when she read he brother's letter.

'I heerd a little stranglin' gasp o' mis'ry, an' when I looked roun' she was fallin' from her cheer down onte her face, 'pon the floor. I run an' turned her over on the flat o' her back, an' she lay thar white an' still, like a dead girl. I tell you I was skeert; but I wet her face wi' camphire, an' slapped her han's hard, an' presently she kem to an' opened her eyes dazed-like. 'What ailed ye, lovey?' I sez, an' she looked at me an' tried to laff; but the nex' minute she bust out a-I do) that he is a most worthy gentle- cryin, an' the tears run down her

'Don't you think Edgar knows what's best for you, honey?' he continued anxiously. 'Uncle Jack, go away, please. I

-I-can't talk to you to-day!' and she put her little dimpled hand to her throat, as if she were choking. He got up, but his mouth was set in a straight, stern line.

"I wnette!" and she started and shivered at sound of his sharp voice -" Lynette, you've been humored like a spoi ed baby long enough. Now do as I bid you. When the clock strikes three, Black Beauty will and she did not care for his sudden be around at the gate, and your aunt will take you for a long drive for your health. Be ready!'

'Yes, sir,' she answered, with reellious acquiescence. When Uncle Jack took that high and mighty tone of authority, no one at Blooming Meadows ever dared to disobey. So at three o'clock Lynette was ready, and Sally Ann escorted her downstairs. After all, the scent of the swee ountain air was pleasant to Lynette' our own self-respect and being brandthough she felt it an impossibility to talk, and was glad that Aunt Jill gave all her attention to driving, sitting up 'I advise you to put the thought of glum and taciturn beside the unhappy girl. OBITUARY.

MARGARET LYNCH. There passed away yesterday n ing, after a long illness, Margan Ann Power, relict of the late Jose M. Lynch. The death of the decease occurred at her sister's residence, 2 New Gower Street, and in her las moments she was fortified by th rites of Holy Church. She leav to mourn her one sister, Mrs. L. Gearin, and one brother, Mr. Walte M. Power, of St. Louis, with a niec Sister M. Seraphina, of the Order

Sisters of Charity. T. J. GREENE.

Pressure on our space yesterda precluded reference to the demise T. J. Greene, which sad even occurred Sunday at his residence Gower Street. Mr. Greene was man who was widely known and greatly respected and who had man friends, not alone in St. John's bu in many other parts of the Island. I his earlier days he filled an importan position in the office of the late Hon. Jas. Fox, and later and for many years held the onerous position of ac ountant and confidential clerk in the office of Messrs. Shea & Co. Socially s well as commercially Mr. Green was a favorite and for many years he held office in the Benevolent Irish Society, and for a lengthy period identified himself with the St. Vincent de Paul Society. For several years also he was secretary of the Regatta Committee. Mr. Greene married twice his first wife being Miss O'Driscoll, sister of the late Rev. Fr. O'Driscoll while his second wife was Miss Hacktt, daughter of the late Capt. Wur. lackett. Besides his widow, Mr. lort Greene, who does business on Water Street, Sister Winnifred of the Order of Mercy and several other hildren survive him, to whom the

relegrant extends its condolence. MINARD'S LINIMENT CUR
