Chapleau Gets Himself Into Hot Water. His Own Clerical Friends Take Him to Task. Arrest of Andrew Senecal-Cabinet Reconstruction Rumors-Election Trials.

MONTREAL, Oct. 20.—Mr. Chapleau has been taken to task by his own friends for his tirade against the Protestant clergy. Le Moniteur du Commerce says: "The scandals have been so great that a good number of Protestant pastors thought it proper to publicly stigmatize from the pulpit a corruption that seems to have percolated into every portion of our political machinery. They were right. They fulfilled a great duty; nevertheless, this seasonable intervention caused some dissatisfaction. In thesesevere philippics, addressed to the electors in general concerning the OTTAWA, OCL. 20.—The cases of suspended officials in the Department of the Interior, including the case of Mr. A. M. Burgess, Deputy Minister, whose resignation has been in the hands of the Minister since July last, were finally decided upon by the Cabinet Council on Saturday last; but Mr. Dewdney, Minister of the Interior, says that the council's decision will not be made public for a day or two. It is understood that Mr. Burgess, who has been experienced by Messrs. Foster, Dewdney and Haggart, the sub-committee of the council will be reinstated in office as Deputy Minister, the sub-committee's report having declared that he acted in an ill-advised way, but not dishonorably or wrongfully, in having made a payment of $100, which was justly due to his late father-in-law, irregularly.

THE BAPTIST CONVENTION.

Most of the Day Devoted to Home Missions—A Scarcity of Preachers.

Toronto, Oct. 20.—After an hour's devotional exercises led by Rev. E. D. Sherman, of Eden. Rev. Dr. Thomas, president, took the chair, and the Baptist Convention went into session for its second day's work. There were more than 300 present.

Rev. T. P. McEwen, secretary of the home missions, submitted the annual report in connection with that branch of the work. Touching references were made to the deaths of Thomas Lailey and Wm. Craig, sen. The report stated that it is now the policy of the board that no church shall be erected until two-thirds of the cost is provided for by cash or bona fide subscriptions. This, it is hoped, will do away with the endless debt and constant appeals, of which they had had so much recently. During the year chapels had been built as Moore Ceater, Bay Yiew, Drummond, Bellerica and Bancroft, and others are in course of construction at Claremont and Doe Lake. Parsonages had been built at Almonte, Windsor and Fullarton. A dozen places could be mentioned where organization was either desired or considered, but the board would not recommend such organization when such a step meant a hopeless search for another pastor or the outlay of hundreds of dollars from the mission churches that for weeks and months have prayed for a pastor, but none has come. Only three churches had been organized, Wendecker, Weidman and Dempsey. Barrie, Mount Forest, Parkhill and McGillivray have declared themselves self-supporting, and Fenelon Falls has almost reached that point. Over 170 churches are now receiving aid from the mission fund, and of these only four have falled to respond to the call for help. The contributions of mission churches had advanced 32 per cent. over 1890. Contributions from the Sunday schools have been greater than in other years. The baptisms reported in connection with the mission churches number about 900. The women's societies east and west have rendered generous help. The board is impressed home mission report was unanimously adopted.

Mr. John Stark, treasurer of the home mission fund, read the financial statement. The total amount expended during the year in spreading the gospel had been $21,730 and the amount received $19,271.

Rev. G. B. Davis of Windsor, read a paper on "The perils and prospects of home mission work." The great thing that they wanted was men. While a great deal had been done by the intermittent service of students on the field, and this was the practical part of their training, there should be more permanency on the field. There was a danger of doing too little evangelization. There was a peril in the kind of men they were to employ. The power of the school and the press was overlooked as factors in the extension of the work. The inflexibility of their methods burned 50 tons of sugar for Tuel.

Alexander Grant, formerly of London, gave an address on "The polley to be pursued in regard to churches long de-pendent on the board." He said he be-lieved mission churches were doing more lieved mission churches were doing more work than was being done by the city charges. In the course of his remarks he said there was too much competition between ministers for fat city churches. He thought that what we wanted in the He thought that what we wanted in the university of the denomination was a chair of "common sense." He would let some churches die entirely. In cases of church quarrels he would cut off the supplies right straight, and not even give them porridge and milk. Speaking of training students for the ministry, he said that if he had a good piece of hemlock he would plane it off and nail it up to stand the blast of time, but he did not think it necessary to ornament and polish these young students in order to send them into the mission field. He would give more for a good solid young man filled them into the mission field. He would give more for a good solid young man filled through and through with the power of God than another young man loaded up in modern philosophy, ethics and science. He did not wish to deprecate the educational training among their students, he wished he himself had more of it, but there was the himself had more of it, but there was he himself had more of it, but there was such a thing as stuffing too much of this routine knowledge into their young preachers. Every young man who came along had to take such and such a course before he was equipped and the system seemed to be now a-days that every student who came along, whether he be a Maud S. or a Clydesdaie, had to be trained to go in 2:10. What they wanted was good solid men. Before sitting down he hinted that the faculty at McMaster were very anxious to have their gradutes placed in choice city

Mr. Grant's address was followed by tremendous applause, but before the cheerin had ceased Rev. James Coutts rose to re pudiate some of the statements made by Rev. Mr. Grant. The delegates had cheered Rev. Mr. Grant. The delegates had cheered some of Mr. Grant's remarks, he said, and he had joined in some of the applause, expecially when Mr. Grant admitted that he wished he had more education. He thought that their young men entering the ministry could not go into the work with too much knowledge of theology and philosophy. Those who are best equipped and are the greatest power in the church are the men who are consecrated and have together with that unction from on high a thorough training and a first-class armor in the way of education.

He said there were no facts to warrant such a statement, and he, on behalf of the professors, could not afford to allow such an impression to go abroad. This ended the discussion.

impression to go abroad. This ended the discussion.

At the evening session, Rev. Ira Smith, of London, was introduced to the convention and delivered an excellent address on "A forward movement in home missions." They had yesterday reached the end of their 40th year as a home mission convention and the progress during those 40 years had been very gratifying. They now had in the field 80 or 90 men and perhaps 200 stations, whereas in 1851 they had only 3 men and but 11 men in 1858. This year they had raised $19,000 for missions. In less than seven years they had more than doubled their receipts. He would emphasize the importance of appointing general missionaries.
