No Poison Said To Be Found in Joseph Siiton's Stomach by Government Analyist.

An Advertiser representative was this afternoon informed, on reliable authority, that Government Analyst Ellis' report in the Sifton case would be favorable to the defense in so far the report being that no traces whatever of poison were found therein. This intelligence came from Prof. Ellis, through a government detective, who has been working on the case. Crown Attorney Magee, when seen in reference to this matter, was found in consultation with Edgar Morden, the crown's chief witness in the Sifton Mr. Magee was non-committal as to whether the report was true or not, and said that matters were not in such a condition that he could say anything for publication.

Referring to the contemplated action of the Sifton defense in applying for a postponement, Mr. Magee said the crown would certainly oppose the granting of the application, as they were aware of no reason why the trial should be postponed.

Because Men Want a Game to Play and Not One to Watch.

Chicago Inter-Ocean: The decline of baseball from the position of the leading American sport, which it once occupied, has been very marked in the last few years. Various reasons have been assigned for its decadence, and many efforts have been made by those causes of its decline are natural ones, arising from the development and enlargement of the field of sport in America, and it is doubtful if baseball. great a game as it is, will ever again regain the hold it once had.

Baseball has enjoyed the distinction ings. Nearly every city in the United States has its team of high-priced players. A few years ago the interest in these inter-city contests was so great as to amount to civic pride in the possession of a winning team. To a visitor at baseball grounds today the reason for the stretch of grand stand and bleachers, with their tunnense seating capacity, is not obvious, but it is not so very long ago since even these were insufficient at a game of little more than ordinary interest.

It is a question of the survival of the in county circles over the manner in fittest in the field of sport, and the velopment in other games that it is little wonder that there is a falling off less violent exercise than baseball, under the most healthful conditions, it whose occupations keep them within doors, and if an accurate account could be made it would be found that the majority of business men who formerly sought recreation at the baseball fields are now wielding a golf club on leisure afternoons.

More than most popular forms of sport baseball has to rely upon its own merits. Take, for instance, horse-racing which is, and always has been a leading form of sport. How many of the thousands who now attend each race meet would do so if the issue of speculation and chance were not connected with the turf. Gambling is not generally connected with baseball, and this alone is enough to kill interest with a certain class. This is shown by the increased attendance in one of the western cities where gambling has been recently permitted and where bets are made not only on the result of the game, but on the hits scored by in-the opposing batter, but it is not in as marked a degree as the many forms of sport. It is this quality that has made boxing popular since the days of the Grecian games, and will continue to do so after Horton and anti-Horton laws are dust and ashes. Hero worship is manifest in sports as in all other fields of human action, and the public delights in bestowing laurel wreaths. Finally there are two other reasons which contribute to the decline of baseball. One is that the rowdy methods adopted by the players, and encouraged or at least defended by the managers and owners, has cast an odium on the game, and the other is that the public has shown unmistakable signs of becoming weary of the game itself. Variety is the condiment of existence, and baseball has occupied the throne as king of all games in America for a long time. An eligible competition needs only to make its appearance to be hailed with "The king is dead; long live the king." Re-Philadelphia, Sept. 22.—There are forms and clean methods may do much signs of wavering in the strikers' to put the game on a better footing,
