In esentor class of the year 186—was composed of eight young men, each of whom it was predicted would one day make his mark in the world. Similar predictions are no uncommon things, and perhaps no class leaves the precints of the university of whom the same has not been said; but, for once, the wiseacres seemed to have some fair grounds for their prognostications; for though among them towered no intellectual giants, yet there were no sluggerds or COAL giants, yet there were no sluggards or mental pigmies. would have been admirable had you taken into consideration the thinness of partition mental pigmies.

In one of the rooms, around a table that held glasses and the paraphernalia requisite to the compounding of that time-honored beverage known as "punch," believed by many antiquarians to be the veritable ambrosial nectar, these eight luminaries of university were seated, each in FOR & Cº, the position that accorded best with his humor or his indolence, and almost invisible from the thick clouds of smoke issuing from choice Havana or much-loved and gentlem much-abused meerschaum. Toasts had been drank, hopes and good wishes ex-

CHERRY'S PROPOSAL

BY FORLORN HOPE.

The senior class of the year 186-- was

Suddenly Frank Lewis, a tall, fair-haired young fellow, claiming a northern home, ose, and lifting his glass, said: "A briming bumper to the toast of many a former reunion, the blue-eyed enchantress who holds us all in thrall. Need I name the fair, mischief-loving Cherry Brompton?"

A simultaneous shout of approval met this speech, and every glass was returned to the table drained of its contents.

It may as well be mentioned here that Miss Cherry Brompton was the only daughter of the president of the college, and shared the fate common to all young ladies occupying such a position, that of having at one time or another every youth, whether of suitable or unsuitable age, within the university walls for her devoted admirer. But Cherry certainly did not owe all of her popularity to the fortuitous circumstance of being her father's daughter, else there are no virtues in bright eyes, rosy cheeks, and one of the best dispositions in the world.

The same young lady was likewise possessed of the very demon of mischief, and many a mad prank could be traced to the ng brain and skillful execution of the president's daughter. The most exaspera-ting fact, however, was that, though countting fact, nowever, was that, though counting her victims by the score, she seemed to laugh with impunity at the rosy little god: and yet, each new victim felt sure that if opportunity only offered, which, by the way, very unaccountably never did offer, he should receive such assurance of reciprocated attachment as would remove all smart from the sampling wound. However covers cated attachment as would remove all smart from the rankling wound. However powerful the remedy might prove, if once applied, had until now remained a mystery; for, with a tact truly Napoleonic, Miss Cherry had contrived to keep each and every devoted admirer in a state of blissful ignorance so that it became her great beat interest so that it hereme her great head. prance, so that it became her great boast ary to all p ved ideas on that "Gentlemen," and this time the speaker, will Harrington, was dark and swarthy, with fierce black eyes that told of smoldering fires, "I have a plan to propose. We have all been generous rivals in literature; let us concinue such in the race for love. It were useless for any one present to deny that Miss Brompton has taught us all the lesson that, sooner or later, must be conned by every man; and I think I go not far astray when I add that we each secretly cherish the belief that in teaching him she has learnt it likewise. Let us put it to the us tall and stout, dark and fair, the lively and sedate—a goodly lot to choose from; and whatever fate betides, let there be no malice or ill-will, the unlucky triumphing in the knowledge that at one fell swoop we have outgeneraled one of the best feminine tacticians, and, nolens volens, compelled Miss Cherry Brompton to terms of surren-"Agreed! agreed!" went from lip to lip, "Agreed! agreed!" went from lip to lip, one among the number remaining silent.

"What say you, Bayard?" asked Frank Lewis, turning to his right-haud neighbor, a tall, slightly-built young fellow.

A peculiar smile lit the face of the one addressed, but he shook his head decidedly.
"Count me out of that frolic," he said.
"I think seven proposals will be as much as Miss Cherry will be able to master; and, heades, really."— besides, really "——

"Not afraid of getting the mitten, Bay ard? Come, we know you are a modest man, and are perhaps, the only one who, proving the happy man, would be prepared for the fetters matrimonial!"

"Perhaps that may account for his un-willingness to join us!" cried another, and so the joke went round, but Bayard Raynor, the best-natured man in the world, his chums declared, took all the bantering, yet remained firm.

"You will at least keep our secret, Bayard?" asked Will Harrington.

"On my honor, gentlemen!" Bayard replied solemnly, though a just perceptible smile looked mischievously in the corners of the handsome, expressive mouth.

"Then it is agreed. Each is to try his luck and keep the result secret until one hour before the ball to-morrow, when we are all to meet here and the result make are all to meet here and the result make known; and we all swear that the unforknown; and we all swear that the unfortunates are to congratulate their successful rival without jealously or ill-will. There, the bell cries 'All lights out!' so here, for the last time, I obey its summons!" and before the others could prevent it, Frank Lewis blew out the lamp, leaving the others to scramble out of the room in the best manner they could manner they could.

Commencement day, technically speaking, was at an end, that is, the orator had spoken, the degrees had been conferred, and students and guests had scattered, to assemble again at the ball that was to close the day.

One by one the seven conspirators reached the place of rendezvous and sat down in silence, as if each feared to be the first to

In was the eve of commencement day in W— university, and the labors of the year fairly over, the studious as well as those of whom books and study were synonymous of boredom, joined together in all modes of rejoicing allowed by college discipline, and in others, which if not exactly permitted, were at least winked at on occasions like the present, and many a social glass clinked to the stereotyped toasts considered necessary to such convival gatherings.

as a gentle rap was heard, and Miss Cherry Brompton thrust her pretty face through the half-open door.

"Please Mr. Harrington, don't threaten so loud, especially an innocent person. Car Mr. Raynor and I come in?" and, waiting no reply, she entered the room followed by Bayard Raynor.

"The best laid plans come oft to grief," she continued, "and yours, gentlemen, would have been admirable had you taken much-abused meerschaum. Toasts had been drank, hopes and good wishes exchanged, each successive candidate being received with a vim and enthusiasm impossible to recall, once our footsteps have strayed beyond the portals of college life.

Suddenly Frank Lewis, a tall, fair-haired young fellow, claiming a northern home, ose, and lifting his glass, said: "A briming bumper to the toast of many a former reunion, the blue-eyed enchantress who holds us all in thrall. Need I name the fair, mischief-loving Cherry Brompton?"

A simultaneous shout of approval met this speech, and every glass was returned to the table drained of its contents.

It may as well be mentioned here that Miss Cherry Brompton was the only daughter of the recidence of the conditions of the conditions of the condition of the candidate being she answered demurely.

"But, Miss Cherry," persisted Will Harrington, known far and near for his unvielding temper, "will you at least give us a token by which one of us will understand that for him your answer is still the same?"

"I don't know how that might have been, Mr. Harrington, if you had not been forestalled, but, you know, first come first served, and Mr. Raynor proposed just twenty-four hours ahead of you," and, unable to control her feelings, the young lady left the room suddenly, leaving her lover to explain matters as he best could.

"Well, boys," said Bayard, as soon as Miss Cherry had disappeared, "I hope you bear me no malice, for all is fair in love and war. You see I could not promise to do what had already hear developed the portals being the same of the sumple of the same?"

could not promise to do what had already been done, and, but for your bantering and —truth to tell—your boastful manner—I should have confessed there and then, and I only thought that it would teach you a lesson. Honor bright, I knew nothing of the true state of affairs until, coming here, I met Charwy who tald I met Cherry, who told me what she had done. As the next best thing to being a bridegroom is to dance at the wedding, I hope to see you all at mine, three months hence, the shortest period under which Miss Cherry Brompton will consent to become Mrs. Raynor. Who will wish us God speed?"

A moment no one answered; then Will Harrington, as prone to generous impulses as he was quick to anger, crossed over to the young man, whom they all loved, and grasping the outstretched hand, sheek it warmly. His example was gladly followed by the others, and ere the wedding day they could all join the laugh sure to follow any allusions to Cherry's proposals. A moment no one answered : then Wil

Such a boast was a slur on the courage and gallantry of the university, which many an unhappy youth sought to retrieve, but Cherry Brompton knew too well how to fence and parry, and she invariably came of victorious. One by one the seven conspirators reached the place of rendezvous and sat down in silence, as if each feared to be the first to speak. At last Will Harrington, whom nothing could long daunt, looked triumphantly around, and said: "Well, gentlemen, it becomes a mere matter of form to put the question as to which is the happy man."

"Why?" "How can you know?" Did she tell you?" escaped from the lips of the half a dozen.

"I shall be glad to receive your congratu-" lations, for Mr. Cherry has smiled most benignly on my suit."

An exclamation of surprise followed this announcement.

"Come, Will, that won't do," said Frank Lewis, "as I happen to be Miss Brompton's choice."

"And I! And I!" exclaimed each of the others in their turn. There was a moment's blank astonishment and silence, then a cry of "Sold, by Jove!" broke simultaneously from the group.

"Boyard Raynor has betrayed us? He shall rue his share in this farce!" and Will Harrington's face became still darker with rage, when further comments were stayed as a gentle rap was heard, and Miss Cherry Brompton thrust her pretty face through lations, for Mr. Cherry has smiled most | REST AND COMFORT TO THE SUFFERING
