* A Sham Duel

Period In the South

By G. MORGAN WOODRUFF

Copyright by American Press Asso-clation, 1911.  Colonel Meredith was one of the old-er Federal officers of the civil war.

It was some ten years after its close that the colonel, then an old man, concluded to go south and take up his residence there. His reason for doing so was that, being in poor health, he thought the climate would agree better with him than that of the north. The colonel took up his abode in a beautiful town in one of the cotton states. That period was too soon after the war to admit of his being received with especial friendliness by all the people of the place. Some welcomed him, some ignored him, and some-principally women-treated him rancorou ly. One group were disposed to admit the colonel to citizenship on equal terms. These were the Confederate veterans who had fought for the lost cause and dropped it forever at Appomatox.

A small newspaper, the Banner, was published in the place, its editor being Charles Morrill, a man about twenty eight years of age. He was the pet of two elderly maiden aunts with rhom he lived and who had from his childhood idolized him to such an extent that though he was eighteen years old before the war closed they would not consent to his joining the army. Nevertheless they were among those who retained all the bitterness en-gendered by the unfortunate struggle and did all they could to keep it alive in their nephew.

The presence of Colonel Meredith in the town was especially obnoxious to these ladies, and they found it impossible to rest easy as long as he remained there. They snapped at the Confederate veterans contemptuously for permitting one of the south's invaders to settle among them, but the veterans were not disposed to inter-fere. Then the ladies called upon persons of their acquaintance to ostra Colonel Meredith, but met with indifferent success. Finally it occurred to them that their nephew might accomplish through his newspaper what they had failed to effect by other

The nephew was one of those young men who find it easy to be smart. He had always been considered such by his aunties, who had no difficulty in transmitting their opinion to the object of their adoration. No suggestion was needed to inspire Mr. Morrill with an idea of making it so unpleasant for Colonel Meredith in the community that he would of his own accord pack

HOW CHRONIC COUGHS

Are Being Cured by Vinol New Haven, Conn.—"I was troubled with a most persistent chronic cough for a long time and had tried so many remedies and prescriptions without benefit that I was discouraged. I was persuaded by my friends to try Vi-nol. After taking the second bottle, my cough left me, and I must say I never felt better in my life. I can also recommend Vinol to any one in a run-down condition as the best possible remedy."

It is the combined action of the medicinal elements of the cods' livers, aided by the blood-making and strength-creating properties of tonic iron which makes Vinol so efficient in curing chronic coughs, colds and bronchitis—at the same time building up the weakened, run-down system.

Try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that your money will be returned if it does not help you.

north. He began a covert but annoying fire upon the object of his displeasure, such as that officer had during his term of army service often been subjected to, though the missiles used had been lead instead of type metal These articles were so worded that though no direct reference was made in them to Colonel Meredith every one knew that they referred to him.

One branch of the Meredith family had lived in the south, the colo nel's sister having married John Turn lee, a Louisianian. Her husband had fought for the southern side and bad Richmond. After the war was concluded the president of the United States had appointed the Confederate soldier's son, Edward Turnice, to a cadetship at the United States Nava academy. While Colonel Meredith was beginning to suffer the annoying articles in the Banner young Turnlee was completing an education to fit him for an officer in the service of Colonel Meredith, who had fought both in open fields and behind breast works, was not to be dislodged by in nuendoes. He paid no attention to the petty shots in the Banner. Indeed, he was so advised by a few of the citizens with whom he was on good terms They remonstrated with the editor, but the people were not yet united on the treatment that should be given a northern man, and Morrill found those to egg him on in his attacks upon the

Finally an article appeared casting reflection on Colonel Meredith's good name. The object of the attacks had thus far listened to the suggestions o his friends as to what course to take with regard to them, but now he decided to take the matter into his own hands. He wrote a polite note to the editor requesting him to prove his al-

The colonel was by this time more than seventy years old. His eyesight was defective and his heart had not been improved by his sojourn south. Besides, he was suffering from the effect of wounds received in the late war. He was not a proper person to be pitted against a young man in any form of encounter. Morrill resolved to continue to harass his antagonist. If the colonel insisted on satisfaction he could decline to give it on the ground that his challenger was not a proper adversary for one in the prime of life. Since he could not prove his charge he replied to the colonel's note that the colonel was not warranted in presuming the article referred to him. Several notes passed between the two, in the last of which the colonel said that if they were in northern territory he would sue the Banner for defamation of character Such a course at the time in the south would be impracticable. He therefore felt obliged to settle the matter by the prevailing custom in that regionthe code duello. Would Mr. Morrill kindly refer him to a friend?

Had Morrill been anything but prig and a fool he would have seen that his adversary, though living among a people still smarting under the effects of a war in which he had opposed them, was sure in the end to get the advantage. Instead of having such discernment his consummate egotism led him further in his idiotic course. He conceived the idea of getting rid of the colonel by ridicule. He would accept his challenge and turn the affair into a mockery. He succeeded in convincing some of his friends that this was the best and only way out of the matter both for Colonel Meredith and the town. He persuaded one of his friends to offer his services to his enemy on the ground that he felt that the colonel was right in demanding satisfaction and should have fair play. The colonel accepted the offer, and in this way the editor controlled both seconds so far as making the affair a sham was concerned, though the colonel's second had been assured that the plan was merely to satisfy the colonel without resorting to bloodshed.

The intention being to make the affair an imitation duel, it was not hurried, as such matters usually are. Indeed, some of the Confederate veterans, hearing that a duel between the ex-Federal officer and the editor was about to take place, went to Morrill and protested. Morrill told them that no harm was to be done the colonel and the proposed fight with blank cartridges was the best and only way to settle the matter. The veterans withdrew and held a consultation. Finally one of their number, who had become more friendly with Colonel Meredith than the others and knew more about him and his affairs, said:

"Leave the matter to me." This was done, and as a body the veterans took no further action.

On the morning the duel was to come off Morrill was in fine feather. No one except the two seconds and one or two of his intimate friends knew that the affair was to be a sham. The editor intended after it was over to put himself right in the matter of fighting an old man by pub-T. B. Taylor & Sons, Druggists, Watford Balling a malerous account of the meeting, announcing that there had really been no fight at all. He had written the article, into which he had thrown all his ability as a comic writer, and had it locked in his desk

At 8 o'clock in the morning he arose, dressed himself, bid a mock heroic adieu to his aunts, to whom he told his secret, and in due time a carriage drove up with his second, and the two men went to the place ap-pointed for the meeting. Morrill showed his indifference to danger—as it was supposed by those who under-stood the fight was to be to the death -by laughing and joking with the sec-ends. The ground was being paced off when a carriage was driven up, and a young man in a dark blue ununiform alighted. straight for Colonel Meredith, he put

"How do you do, uncle?" The colonel not recognizing him, he continued: "I am your nephew, Edward Turnlee, just graduated from the Naval academy. A Confederate vet-eran who knew all about my father telegraphed me that you were to fight a young man and suggested that I, a young man, should take your place. I am here for that purpose." The change in the spirits of the man who was to be the hero of this sham affair was instantaneous. He turned white as a cloth and trembled like a

"My dear boy," said Colonel Meredith, "it is very good of you to come all the way down here to take your uncle's place, and it proves you to be worthy of my dear sister and your brave father, but I claim the right to settle this matter with Mr. Morrill my-

But the colonel was too old to stand against the young midshipman. The latter insisted upon seeing the pistols loaded and that they contained ball cartridges. Then he told the seconds

But Mr. Morrill was not ready. He told the secret and asked to have the affair called off. To this young Turn-lee would not consent without an ample written apology for his past offenses. Such an one was drawn up and signed, and in the next issue of the Banner it appeared for the edification of the good people of the place who had been gradually dropping the animosities occasioned by the war and were ready for different conditions.

Washington and the Artists. Writing to a friend May 16, 1785, Washington thus described his experience with portrait painters:
"I am so backneyed to the touches of the painter's pencil that I am now altogether at their beck and sit like patience on a monument while they are delineating the lines of my face. It is a proof among many others of what habit and custom can effect. At first I was as impatient of the request and as restive under the operation as a colt is of the saddle. The next time I submitted very reluctantly, but with less flouncing. Now no dray moves more readily to the thrill than I do to the painter's chair."

CURED OF CONSTIPATON

Mr. Andrews praises Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills.

Mr. George Andrews of Halifax, N.S. writes:

"For many years I have been troubled with chronic Constipation. This allment never comes single-handed, and I have been a victim to the many illnesses that constipation brings in its trains. Medicine after medicine I have taken the order to find relief, but one and all left me in the same hopeless condition. The seemed that nothing would expel from me the one ailment that caused so much trouble, yet at last I read about these Indian Root Pills.

That was indeed a lucky day for me.

That was indeed a lucky day for me, for I was so impressed with the state-ments made that I determined to give them a fair trial.

They have regulated my stomach and bewels. I am cured of constipation, and I claim they have no equal as a medical?

For over half a century Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills have been curing constipation and clogged, inactive kidneys, with all the ailments which result from them. They cleanse the whole system and purify the blood. Sold everywhere at 25c, a how.
