If, for an instant, such a dream of enjoyment comes over our spirits, it vanishes, and we realize that child hood's felicities with us have passed forever away. A stream, issuing from a mountain spring, never again flows back to its source; nor does an adult enjoy the repetition of sports that were to him incentives to hilarity when in the heyday of childish fun and frolic. Although those days of mirthful sports have fied, they are not forgotten in old age. The recollection of them sheds a gleam of brightness over the gathering gloom of increasing years. RECREATION AND SPORTS.

We love to see children at play. The laughter and mirth of childhood to us are pleasant sounds. A group of boys on the side-walk, playing at marbles, agreeably attracts our attention, awakens a train of pleasant reminiscences, and carries us back to the light-hearted period of by-gone juvenility. We, for the moment, overleap the toils, cares, anxieties and disappointments of intervening years. We are blest with a momentary illusion. We are boys again, which is the moment of the momen
