Presbyterian College, Halifax.

DR. ANDREW KING, S. T. P.

AMONG the many noble men connected with our College as professors the subject of this sketch holds a conspicuous place. He was appointed to the professoriate of the Free Church College, Halifax, one of the institutions that have happily bleaded their existence in our own Presbyterian College, Halifax, in the year 1848, and for twenty-three years, till waning strength compelled him to resign his labors, was in reality if not in name, the Principal of this College, and of the one into which it merged. In the midst of this period the first of the unions that we inherit took place. In 1860 the Free Church College and that of the United Presbyterian Church became one, as the College of the Presbyterian Church of the Lower Provinces. Dr. King contributed not a little towards this consummation and its prolific results. At the time of his assumption of the duties of his office, Dr. King was in the fifty-fifth year of his life and the eighteenth of his ministry. But, like many another successful Scotch divine, he had spent many years in training for his college work by teaching in the schools of his native land. The
