

CHESS.

SOLUTION.

Problem No. 119: P Knights.
Solved by C. W. L.

PROBLEM No. 121.
Black 7 pieces.

White 7 pieces.
White to play and mate in two moves.

GAME No. 122.

From Chess Players' Chronicle.

This was played in the tournament of the West Yorkshire Association at Dewsbury recently. The Yorkshire Daily Post, in publishing it, says the player of white pieces is, unfortunately, quite blind, but he evinced not only a knowledge of the opening, but a clear grasp of the ever-changing position of the game, which was a particularly lively one.

and White wins.

NOTES.

From the Yorkshire Post.

- a This is a better continuation than Kt to Kt5.
- b The classical defense, of late years almost abandoned, gave white too much time for development.
- c Serious loss of time.
- d An oversight, of course, of which prompt advantage was taken.
- e The winning move.
- f There appeared to be no better resources.
- g If Q takes P, 19 Q takes P ch.
- h The game is practically won now, though it lasted other 23 moves.

27 23 10 6 2 7

a Our impression is that this play is original, and we will be obliged if any one will point out where it has been published before if such is the case.

b Probably 10 6 would have won here.

c 20—24, 28 21, 27—24 draws.

* This brings us to the following position which we present as

PROBLEM No. 285.

Black men 17, 20, 23, Kings 26, 27.

White men 25, 28, 30, Kings 9, 16
White to play and win.

We commend this problem to our readers as involving a nice piece of strategy to accomplish the win.
