GOD SAVE THE KING.

Sundry few and occasional voices have made themselves heard in disparagement of the coronation ceremony. It is ridiculous as antiquated, as a relic of feudalism wholly alien to the spirit of twentieth century democracy. Objection is made that it entails a needless expenditure of public money which might be employed to better advantage. But, however confident these critics may be in the strength of their case the fact remains that the coronation of the King appeals with peculiar force to the mass of the British peoples. Deeply religious as is the form and order of the coronation service it has gathered round it the history and romance of centuries. And the British race does not willingly abandon ceremonial, which speak to the present time out of the distant past. Nor would it be wise to say that this reverence for traditional observance is now without reason of commendation.

The obsequies of a king, the coronation of his successor touch the heart of the wide flung nations and dominions which compose the British Empire. To-day there is no place which throbs its wide dominions to which would not come an echo of the solemn words spoken in the venerable Abbey of Westminster. That man is not to be envied who has no thrill responsive to the thought that in every clime, on every continent and on every sea there are fellow citizens of his own celebrating the crowning of the King. The throne at Westminster is the symbol of the unity of the empire, the coronation service is in the highest sense symbolic of the constitutional duties that rest upon its occupant. Few will doubt that to George the Fifth and his Queen that service will be a sacrament and an inspiration, pledging them and fitting them to fulfill the task to whose accomplishment they have in the Providence of God been called. The King reigns at a period when the future of the great commonwealth of British states is in the making. No sovereign has ever known these states so personally and intimately as they are known to the present King. If his reign be signified by the forging of that indissoluble bond which is the goal of present hope, it will not yield in lustre to that of the most renowned of his predecessors. Because George V. is given that glorious opportunity and has so fair a prospect of seizing and realizing it, Britons everywhere will pray with heart and voice.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

CITY NECESSITIES AND PROBLEMS.

Very few people appreciate how the City of Toronto is growing. Twenty thousand people a year may be regarded as the accretion annually to the population. This means the addition of a good sized town to the city every year. Many people refuse to believe it. Others try to blink the fact, and assert and have asserted ten years past, that every next year is going to be different. But many are also awaking to the significance and importance of this fact.

One result is a congestion of city business. For this the officials are blamed; the departments are abused; the city loses reputation. The unfortunate officials are really not to blame. Work that should have been done years ago has been postponed by procrastinating aldermen and controllers, fearful of the tax rate, until the dammed-up flood of public works threatens to overwhelm the city hall. If there were no other indictment to be brought against the present municipal system than its adherence to the policy of do-it-to-morrow and put-it-off-as-long-as-possible, that should be sufficient to condemn it. We are, so far behind with the works, we do not carry out they are no sooner completed than they are out of date, and new works or additions are needed.

The city hall itself is an example of this. It is not yet, we understand, out of the hands of the architect, and already any tucks that can be found will have to be let out. The widening of King, Queen and Yonge streets every day becomes a more pressing problem. The extension of Victoria-street and Teraulay-street, north, is seen to be urgent. With these are to be considered the new federal square, and the street intended to run south therefrom to Front-street. The Humber boulevard scheme is one that the city cannot afford to reject. Any private corporation would jump at the opportunity it offers to save the river to the citizens. In connection with this the sea-wall and the connecting system of boulevards are indispensable.

The annexation of North Toronto follows along with this, and there are other strips and blocks of territory that must be included at the same time, such as the eighty rods between the city and Deer Park in York Township, and in Todmorden district.

The Sunnyside bridge is practically a part of the boulevard and sea-wall scheme, and the railway improvements there involve the esplanade viaduct, the union station, the North Toronto station or stations, and large questions of electric railway service, radials, tubes, and civic lines. The Queen-street bridge and the Winton-avenue bridge, over the Don, are not a day ahead of necessity.

The hydro-electric system is an immense undertaking and must be considered in its relation to the city as a whole, and the stimulus it gives to still further development. Other timely works are the trunk sewer, perhaps the most satisfactory job the city has in hand; the sewage disposal plant; the filtration basin, and the waterworks calamity are apparently in the hands of Providence.

If we do not include the Bloor-street viaduct it is so obviously needed everyone who knows the district will want to know the reason it is not mentioned.

Only a survey in detail of these works would convey to the ordinary reader a proper conception of their gigantic proportions. We do not wish to be unduly hard upon our aldermen, but it is not too much to say that very few of them would be selected by any corporation in the world with interests at stake as large as these works indicate, to manage its affairs.

We are crowning a new king in London to-day, God bless him, but Toronto needs a new government worse than the British Empire needs a new ruler, and that is a loyal and patriotic sentiment. We must be loyal to our city if we are to be loyal to the empire, and we are going to have one of the biggest cities King George will reign over if we go about it properly.

CITY CAR LINES.

Naturally the street railway counsel would disclaim any desire to obstruct the city project of installing car lines in vacant territory outside the limits covered by the street railway contract. But actions speak more audibly than words. In effect the suggestion was made to the city to construct a system that may be entirely unnecessary, and after it is constructed it will be time enough to decide the point. The city very naturally desires to have the most points deliberated upon to have the most consideration may save a vast expenditure, and no one will grudge the time necessary to settle the matter right.

Nothing can be clearer than the determination of the citizens to re-acquire the street railway franchise in ten years' time. The whole press of the city is unanimous on this point, and may be fairly taken as witness to public sentiment and resolve. It follows that all decisions bearing on street railway construction would keep that fact in view, whatever the street railway company may advance to the contrary.

THE DECLARATION OF LONDON.

Strong opposition is still offered in England to parliamentary ratification of the proposed code of international law in naval war, now known as the Declaration of London. One hundred admirals and naval officers have petitioned against its acceptance, and it is undoubted that their position is supported by authorities whose opinion is entitled to respect. On the other hand the imperial conference pronounced in favor of ratification, Australia, which had offered an adverse resolution, refraining from approval, while not overtly supporting.

The declaration is the outcome of an international conference of the chief naval powers held in London, and sitting from December, 1909, to the following February. It was composed of representatives from Britain, Germany, United States, Austria, Spain, France, Italy, Japan, Holland and Russia. The chief points considered include the matter of blockade, which was dealt with in a manner substantially in accordance with British historical practice. It was agreed that to be binding on neutrals the blockade must be maintained by a force sufficient really to prevent access to the enemy's coast line and that a ship cannot be captured on the way to a non-blockaded port, even tho it was intended subsequently to run the blockade. This last provision is opposed as likely to prevent the British navy from bringing pressure to bear on neutral powers.

Objection, however, is chiefly concentrated on the provisions as to contraband where the British delegates admitted foodstuffs under certain conditions to be liable to seizure. This involved a departure from the decided opposition to that interpretation offered by previous British governments. But "conditional contraband" or articles which may be used either for war or peace purposes, is only to be liable to capture, "if it is shown to be destined for the use of the armed forces or a government apparatus of the enemy state." Other paragraphs of the declaration deal with the seizure of contraband persons on board neutral ships, the destruction of neutral prizes, the transfer of an enemy's vessel to a neutral flag and other minor matters.

Many of the British chambers of commerce have petitioned against ratification, on the ground that the effect of the declaration is to expose to capture or deliberate destruction food supplies borne to British ports in neutral vessels; that it does not prevent the conversion of merchant vessels into commerce destroyers and that the admission of the principle of the destruction of neutral vessels would be in the highest degree prejudicial to the interests of the United Kingdom.

The explanations offered by Sir Edward Grey were sufficiently strong to induce the imperial conference to approve the declaration. He urged that if Britain was to be on good terms with other powers it was essential that the government should not decline to be parties to international arrangements. Both the foreign secretary and the premier counseled adoption of the declaration as on its merits advantageous to the United Kingdom, while also declaring that only one thing could secure its safety—the supremacy of the British fleet.

We can all join in the devout and loyal wish that there may not be another coronation for 25 years at least.

Gas As Fuel

Comparison of gas and coal or wood is superfluous. One is a relic of old times, the other the modern, healthful, economic light or fuel. A fire of wood means a lot of preparation, the exertion of emptying ashes, carrying coal, and finally your patience is severely tried when the fire refuses to burn.

Compare this with gas. A gas fire reaches its maximum intensity instantly. There is no preparation, and, furthermore, the expense is less than with any other method. Give the matter a little thought. It's not a case of "Gas I look at it from the modern touch it adds to your home. Why does it cost less? why is it convenient? Because you don't light it till you are ready to use it, and the moment you are through with the fire you turn it out. This can't be done with a coal fire. It burns long after you are through with it, and incidentally burns up money. You need a gas stove—such a stove as the VULCAN. This popular make includes every design, and they give perfect baking results. Call on our showrooms and see them demonstrated. It means a great deal to you.
