in improving upon sensible Old Mother mals met to discuss this lavish and unjust distribution of tails in death, while in life one only was accorded them. Questions, too, might be asked as to the right of one animal to appear wearing the tail of another of a distinctly different species. A neck piece, which I took delight in the other day, was made to represent a mink, with small head and grinning white teeth; but it was made of black Persian lamb, and was finished with six sable tails! Another, made on the same plan, was of grey Persian lamb, with four bushy squirrel tails. It is evidently one of the small economies of Dame Fashion to use up every shred of fur in some way or other, after the manner of the thrifty housekeeper, who thinks it economy to make weird, unnourishing mixtures out of cold scraps, sending them to the table in unrecognizable form, under some French name. If Dame Fashion lines a cloak with mink skins, there will be, naturally, a superfluity of tails, and these, with that remarkable lack of humor for which this personage has become famous, she will attach, in sixes or dozens to a scal, a Persian lamb, a marten, a bear an ermine, and, able lack of humor for which this personage has become famous, she will attach, in sixes or dozens to a seal, a Persian lamb, a marten, a bear, an ermine, and, surveying her work with delicious complacency, will pronounce the effect "Very good," "Very smart," "Chic," "Le dernier cri," "Stylish to a degree," etc. She is a treat, this Dame Fashion, with her perpetual absurdities, her perverted ideas and her ridiculous posings and pronouncements. This season she aspires to bring about the prophetical lying down together of the lion and the lamb—but she wisely waits till both are skinned before she places them side by side. The woman with the fox on her neck and another for a must wears a pheasant's breast in her hat or a bunch of young cock's feathers, and Br'er Fox's glassy eyes are blissfully unconscious of the appetite for fowl which pursued him in life. The beautiful soft little mink of the north finds himself in the strange company of a bird of paradise's waving tail, and the little black flated ermine finds himself snuggling alongside a hat brim with a seagull. But this is by no means the and the little black fixed ermine finds himself snuggling alongside a hat brim with a seaguil. But this is by no means the conity surprise which awaits these little creatures when they have fallen into the hands of Dame Fashion. This personage has always had an idea that she can invariably improve upon nature's ways, consequently she cannot withhold her hand from experiments. Her very latest "is to line the ears of the little fur beastle's head with bits of colored brocade," so that the uncaught ermine will not recognize his brother, with ears "lined with cerise or yellow brocade," and Br'er Fox, who has craftily evaded the trap or the rife built would marvel as he beheld his dark grey friend's pricking, pointed ears, with bire linings! Dame Fashion has also other "latest ideas," one of which is to improve the beaks and eyes of birds. She points self snuggling alongside a hat brim with with pride to a hat of "white felt, trim-The present fashionable whim of combining two or three kinds of fur in one garment, coat, boa, ruff or muff, or of combining bird and beast on hats, is not without its humorous side. The collection of tails, for example, of one sort of animal, attached to a neck piece made of an entirely different beast, is distinctly funny, and one can imagine a conference of animals met to discuss this lavish and unjust distribution of tails in death, while in

Ald. Spence Still Stands With Reluctant Feet Where Aldermanic and Mayoralty Honors Meet.

SOLDIERS IN CITY NEXT MONDAY.

Carbon Light Company's Contract is Not Yet Signed-Assessment of T. Eaton Co.

The Mayoralty situation has not changed with the past two or three days. Ald, Spence is still standing with reluctant where aldermante and Mayoralty honors meet. In other words, he is afraid to take to the ice, tho he has got the skates

He was showing his boots to some friends at the City Hall the other day. Ald. Spence has no corns. He carries about on his person no spare flesh that could run to corns: and, besides, he wears roomy, proad soled, flatfooted boots. Everyone who inspected them said they would make good skating boots.

But, still, Ald, Spence hesitates. Ex-Mayor Shaw is practising his figures every day to increasing advantage. Little is heard of Mr. Howland. Nothing at all of the present incumbent. Such is the Men Arrive on Monday.

Three members of the Reception Committee met the colonels of the local regiments yesterday to make arrangements for the reception of Cols. Otter and Buchan and their men. The meeting took a long time, the there was little to do, and no difference of opinion whatever among those present.

Col. Bruce suggested the advisability of arranging, if possible, that the men would arrive on Sunday, so as not to cut into the business of Monday. Ald, Woods did not like the idea, and it dropped out of sight. It was allowed as a foregone conclusion that the men would arrive at the Union Station, and the following route was decided upon: York, King, Yonge, Queen, to the Armouries. The military unon reaching the Armouries, The military unon reaching the Armouries, would fall into line on both sides of streets and as far back as their numbers may extend, and the carriage whileh will convey cols. Otter and Buchan and Mayor Macdonaid will pass between the military lines.

A telephone message to the local region and the carriage whileh will convey cols. Otter and Buchan and Mayor Macdonaid will pass between the military lines.

A telephone message to the local agent of the steamship line elicited the information.

The Carbon Light Co.'s Contract.

Up to the time for closing the city offices yesterday the Carbon Light & Power Company of Philadelphia had not replied to the inquiry of the City Solicitor as to whether the contract had been signed. This has not occasioned any misgiving, however, among the city officials, as the time may have been necessary to submit the last text of the contract to the lawyers and make the final settlement with the Consumers' Gas Company.
