THE TIMES' NEW REPORTER

USEFUL KNOWLEDGE St. John, N. B., Dec. 12, 1910 Dear Sir: Will you please tell me whether it is the duty of an officer of the law to enforce the law, and if so why so. Yours, Thomas Tuberville Your question, Thomas, reveals an ignorance that is lamentably prevalent in our midst. When a man is appointed an officer of the law, he is clothed with very large powers. It is for him to say whether a law should be enforced. He is the law and jury. For example, if you, Thomas, were a policeman, and you saw a man spitting on the sidewalk, your first duty would be to walk around the block and consider whether in your case the law should be enforced. If you spot on the sidewalk a couple of times yourself while revolving in your mind, I would like to see you with an authority to arrest you. Again, if you were an inspector and were told by a man that he had a sawed-off shotgun, and you had two orders, it would not be your duty to report the action, but to have the man arrested for drunkenness, the evidence being that he saw two doors where the law says there shall be only one. Thus the duty of an officer of the law is not to enforce the law, but to do as he likes about it. Most persons are not competent to interpret the law. They lack intelligence to do so. The police, the judiciary which tells a competent official when to lay hold and when to put his curiosity to rest storage for one year, the Times New Reporter.
