GENERAL NOTES AND NEWS

General Middleton left Ottawa for England on 19th.

The Sleep of the Just.
FOR sleepless nights depending on worry, FOR tremors, indigestion, etc., Burdock Blood Bitters is a remarkably efficient cure. I have used Burdock Blood Bitters for sleepless nights and now sleep well all night. I recommend it to all suffering from imperfect rest.

Chas. H. SMITH, Stony Creek, Ont.

It Saved his Life.
GENTLEMEN, I can recommend Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, for it saved my life when I was about six months old. We have used it in our family when required ever since, and it never fails to cure all summer complaints. I can show fourteen years of age.

FRANCIS WALSH, Dakish, Ont.

A man never becomes so homely that he is not handsome to the woman he is good to.

Four Years in Sawmills.
"For four years I had pimples and sore breaking out on my hands and face caused by bad blood. Medicine from the doctor produced no good impression. At times I was thought to be a young fellow, and I was so generally so that all her family together, and that her best plan would be to take each one separately, and devote her whole energies to improving that person alone. But then she never could make her mind which of the members of the family to begin with. It is small wonder that she often felt a little disheartened; but even that was a cheering symptom, for in the books it is generally just when the little heroines become most discouraged that the seemingly impossible relative exhibits the first signs of relative ability."

So Priscilla persevered; sometimes with merely a shocked glance of disapproval, which she had practiced before the looking-glass until she could do it perfectly, sometimes with some tender, tactful hint. "Don't you think, dear Priscilla, that you are getting on a little better this morning, don't you think you could write your newspaper article on some other day? Is it a work of real necessity? Or she would ask her mother, who was certainly fond of wearing pretty things. "How much bread for poor starving people would the price of your new bonnet buy, mother? I should so like to work it out on my little slate!"

Then she would remind her brother Allick that it was not so much better if, instead of wasting his time in playing with silly little tin soldiers, he would try to learn as much as he could before he was sent to school, while she was never tired of quoting to her sister Betty the line—which Betty, quite unjustly, interpreted to mean that Priscilla thought but poorly of her sister's intellectual capacity.
Be good, sweet maid, and let who will be clever!

Once when, as a great treat, the children were allowed to read "Ivanhoe" aloud, Priscilla declined to participate until she had conscientiously read up the whole Norman period in her English history; and on another occasion she cried bitterly on hearing that her mother had arranged for them to learn dancing, and even endured bread and water for an entire day, rather than consent to acquire an accomplishment which she feared from what she had read, would prove a snare. On the second day—well, there was roast beef and Yorkshire pudding for dinner, and Priscilla yielded; but she made the resolution—and kept it too—that, if she went to the dancing-class, she would firmly refuse to take the slightest pains to learn a single step.

I only mention all these traits to show that Priscilla really was an unusually good child, which makes it the more sad and strange that her family should have profited so little by her example. She was never loved nor respected as she ought to have been, I am grieved to say. Her papa, when he was not angry, made the cruellest fun of her mild reproach; her mother continued to spend money on dresses and bonnets, and even allowed the maid to say that her mistress was fast at home, when she was merely unwilling to receive visitors. Allick and Betty, too, only grew more exasperated when Priscilla urged them to keep their tempers, and altogether she could not help feeling how wasted and thrown away she was in such a situation.

But she never quite lost heart. Her papa was a literary man, and wrote tales, some of which she feared were not as true as they affected to be, while he invariably neglected to insert a moral in any of them. Frequently she dropped little remarks before him with apparent carelessness, in the hope that he might put them in print, but he never did; she never could recognize herself as a character in any of his stories, and so at last she gave up reading them at all.

But one morning she came more near to giving up in utter despair than ever before. Only the previous day she had been so hopeful! Her father had really seemed to be beginning to appreciate his little daughter, and had presented her with a picture in the new coinage to put in her money box. This had emboldened her to such a degree that, happening on the following morning to hear him ejaculate, "Confound it! she had, pressing one hand to her beating heart and laying the other hand softly upon his shoulder (which is the proper attitude on these occasions), reminded him that such an expression was scarcely less reprehensible than a bad language. Upon which her hard-hearted papa had told her, almost sharply, "not to be a little prig!"

Priscilla forgave him, of course, and freely, because he was her father and it was her duty to bear with him, but she felt the injustice deeply for all that. Then, when she went up into the nursery, Allick and Betty made a frantic uproar merely because she insisted on teaching them the moves in chess when they perverely preferred reversal! So, feeling baffled and sick at heart, she had put on her hat and run out alone to a quiet lane near her home, where she could soothe her troubled mind by thinking over the ingratitude and lack of appreciation which her efforts were continually met with.

She had not gone very far up the lane when she saw, seated on a bench, a bent old woman in a poke-bonnet, with a crutch-handled stick in her hands, and this old woman Priscilla (who was very quick of observation) instantly guessed to be a fairy in which as it fell out, she was perfectly right.

"Good day, my pretty child," croaked the old dame.

"Good-day to you, ma'am," answered Priscilla politely, for she knew that it was not only right, but prudent, to be civil to fairies, particularly when they take the form of old women. "But, if you please, you must call me pretty, because I am so. At least, she added, for she prided herself upon her truthfulness, 'not exactly pretty. And I should like to be always thinking about my looks, like poor Milly—she's our housemaid, you know—and I so often have to tell her that she did not make her own face."

"I don't alarm you, I see," said the old crows; "but possibly you're not aware that you're talking to a fairy?"

"Oh, yes, I am; but I'm not a bit afraid, because, you see, fairies can only hurt bad children."

"Ah! and you're a good little child—that's not difficult to see!"

"They don't see 'it at home," said Priscilla, with a sad little sigh, "or they would listen more when I tell them of things they oughtn't to do."

"And what things do they do if they oughtn't to do?"

"Oh! I don't mind in the least," Priscilla hastened to assure her; and then she told the old woman all her family's faults, and the way it was to bear with them, and give them a trial to induce them to mend their ways. "And papa is getting worse than ever," and concluded dolefully. "Only fancy, this very morning he called me a little prig!"

"Tut-tut! said the fairy sympathetically, dear-deary and so he called you did he? 'A little prig!' And you, too! Ah! the world's coming to a pretty pass! I suppose, now, your papa and the rest of them have got it into their heads that you are too young and too inexperienced to set up as their adviser, is that it?"

"I'm afraid so," admitted Priscilla. "But you mustn't blame them, she added gently; 'we must remember that they don't know any better—mustn't we, ma'am?"

"You sweet child!" said the old lady with enthusiasm; "I must see if I can't do something to help you, though I'm not the fairy I used to be. Still there are tricks I can manage still, if I'm put to it. What you want is something that will prove to them that they ought to pay more attention to you, ah!—something that can be no possible mistake about!"

"Yes," cried Priscilla eagerly; and—how would it be if you changed them into something else, just to show them; and then I could ask for them to be transformed back again, you know?"

"What an ingenious little thing you are!" exclaimed the fairy; but let us see, as you came home and found your cruel papa doing duty as the family butler, or strutting about as a Coochin China fow!"

"Oh, yes; and I'd feed him every day, till he was sorry," interrupted the warm-hearted little girl impulsively.

"Ah! but you're so hasty, my dear. Who would write all the clever articles and tell tales to earn bread and meat for you all! Fowls can't use a pen. No; we must find a prettier trick than that. There's one I seem to remember, long, long ago, for a good little ill-used girl, just like you. Now, what was it? Some girl I gave her whenever she opened her lips—"

"Why I remember—how funny that you should have forgotten! Whenever she opened her lips, coins and diamonds and rubies fell out. That would be the very thing! Then they'd have to attend to me! Oh, do be a kind old fairy, and give me a gift like that—do, do!"

"Now, don't be so impatient! You forget that this is not the time of year for roses; and as for jewels—well, I don't think I can be very wrong in supposing that you open your lips pretty frequently in the course of the day!"

"Allick does call me a 'mag,' said Priscilla; but that's wrong, because I never speak without having something to say. I don't think people ought to—it may do much harm, mayn't it?"

"Undoubtedly. But anyhow, if we made it every time you opened your lips, you would soon ruin me in precious stones—that's plain. No; I think we had better say that the jewels shall only drop when you are saying something improving—how will that do?"

"Very nicely indeed, ma'am, thank you," said Priscilla, "because, you see, it comes to just the same thing."

"Ah, well, try to be as economical of your words as you can."

Cough-Cures

Are abundant; but the one best known for its extraordinary anodyne and expectorant qualities is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. For nearly half a century this preparation has been in greater demand than any other remedy for colds, coughs, bronchitis, and pulmonary complaints in general.

"I suffered for more than eight months from a severe cough accompanied with hemorrhage of the lungs and the expectation of matter. The physician gave me up, but my druggist prevailed on me to try

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral.

I did so, and soon began to improve; my lungs healed, the cough ceased, and I became stouter and healthier than I have ever been before. I would suggest that the name of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral be changed to 'Elixir of Life, for it certainly saved my life.'—F. J. Child, Sable, Boston, Ayer.

"A few years ago I took a very bad cold, which settled on my lungs. I had night sweats, a hacking cough, and great soreness. My doctor's medicine did me no good. I tried many remedies, but received no benefit; every day I grew weaker and weaker. I was advised to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and as a last resort, did so. From the first dose I obtained relief, and, after using two bottles of it, was completely restored to health."—F. Adams, New Britain, N. J.
