

TO DO IN THE HOME.

Very Soon.

"Very soon," earnestly warned To this earnest warning, "I will not go from the chamber of death, nor will I leave the house until I have seen you again." And so it was, and so it came to pass.

Very soon Charles' earnest words Will be proved to be true.

Shall we be doing the master?

Such an unseemly house that

Very soon, but unluckily now

For his own sake he'll never

And life's hidden sake he'll befool'd

On the further happy shore.

Very soon—oh word of comfort

Will come to us again in the year.

Very soon the solemn warning!

May the unawakened hear.

To take with his beloved Bride;

Who will then leave his side?

The Brother's Part.

Brothers should be their sisters' guardians.

Every young man knows what true

gallantry is, and what it requires of him.

He is ready to be every woman's true knight,

ready to defend her from danger, to shield

her from every insult, to risk his own life

in her behalf.

Now, to whom should every young man show his knight, trust gallantry to? To whom, if not to his sisters? They are not the first claim on his affection? If he is not a true gentleman to his own sisters, can he be at heart a true gentleman to any other woman? Can a young man be manly and true to his own sister with less respect and honour than he shows to other young ladies? He must consider himself their true knight, whose cause it is to bear about them every needed sacrifice, to serve them, and to promote their highest good in every way.

Besides this standing between his sister and danger, every brother should, also,

show his own love and fidelity to trust and in his brotherhood.
