for me. I began to lose much interest in my dally occupation, and the great appetite for learning, and knowledge, and wisdom, which I had was also lessened. My mind seemed to be clear, and the main object to which it was now turned was to something wholly out of the common course. About two days after this I could no longer do without causing some commotion or excitement. That very night of the third day I began my first robbery.

I arose from bed at about one o'clock a. m. and went out of doors. It was

MAPLE HILL.

I arose from bed at about one o'clock a. m. and went out of doors. It was warm, but very windy. I went to my room again, but could not think of going to bed; I wanted very much to rouse up something or somebody; when suddenly the thought came to surprise and cause trouble to some one. I thought of going over to the house of my nearest neighbor, Jas. B. Goetchius, and throw large stones at the door of his house and windows; when another thought flashed across me, to go to the toll gate, about half a mile off, and do something of the kind there.

time leaving a note there containing remarks such as threatening their life, and using very profane language. Peace still continued, and I was not satisfied. This continued, and I was not satisfied. This yearning and tempting was incessant. About a month afterward I started on another burglarious expedition. This was the Jefferson Sunday School. I entered it, forcing open a blind on the south side, about 2 o'clock, A. M. By this time I began to feel some sorrow for these cruel acts, and began to read some of the most pious and best of the library books I had thus obtained by theft. They were, indeed, very good books; and were, indeed, very good books; and having read the first one through, I began to realize and perceive my great wickedness. I was much comtorted, and wickedness. I was much comforted, and read several more with good result. But I could not feel easy. I next broke open and robbed the school house on the Athens road and the one at Leeds. After that I wanted to repent, and was about to confess my crimes to the Rev. Father O'Driscoll and Mr. A. M. Osborn, a Catskill lawyer, when I saw the following GLOWING NOTICE in the Catskill Recorder, which was probably the reason that I lost all desire to make an open confession of my guilt, for it was stated in such a singular and inciting manner that it seemed to relieve me of my sorrow and distress and rouse up the old desire to do further mischief.

"The school house in Leeds was broken open on Tuesday night, and in the morning the contents of the desks, the furniture, maps, &c., were found piled promiscuously on the floor. A letter was left stating the determination to commit depredations—said they had commenced at the small school house on the Athens road (the one that was burned last night)—and that they were on their way West, &c. They claim to be in the service of Belial and no doubt are right there."

As a counter-irritant I then read the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth chapters of St. Matthew, and retired to my night's rest, much relieved of my uneasiness; but my great sins could never be hidden or dropped from my mind, and a spark of this intense desire to perform some unnatural exploit was still smouldering in my brains.

THE SCISSORS GRINDER.

After supper we had kept up a pleasant and delightful conversation with each other, as is usually the case with true friends that have not seen each SAINT JOHN, N. B., FRIDAY EVENING, JUNE 13, 1873.

other for a long time; and in this way was that evening passed.

We showed our friend to bed on a sofa, on which were placed some quilts and blankets for a covering. My parents then retired up stairs. I was now the only one up, and sat down by the table and read for about half an hour, when I felt sleepy and was about to enter my room, when suddenly I was aroused from all sleepiness by this strong sensation in my mind ness by this strong sensation in my mind to execute some uncommon or unnatural and inhuman juggle. The power was much stronger and more sudden than I had ever experienced it before. I wanted had ever experienced it before. I wanted to relieve myself of it, but I was utterly helpless. I began to become very hot, my ears were ringing, and my heart beat very loud and quick for a short time, and the hair on my head seemed to be standing upright. All this lasted hardly a minute, when I began to become cool again, and everything was very quiet. I took up a small Testament and began to read. I had scarcely finished the first verse when some violent and electric force swept past my face. It was like a flash of lightning, if it could have been directly before my eyes, and without any noise. I dropped my arm and book with a loud ly before my eyes, and without any noise. I dropped my arm and book with a loud clap on the little table before me. I began to shake and tremble in every limb. Great fear seized me for a little while, after which everything seemed run into my brains. I sat a few moments on my bed in great confusion. Then I went out of doors, lamp in hand, and searched for an axe or hatchet, and went back into my room. I could think of nothing but of sensation, but all in vain. I turned down the lamp very low, took up the hatchet and entered the room of my friend, the scissors grinder, who was sleeping soundly. I placed the lamp on the floor directly below his head. I then cautiously bent over him to see in what restition his head. over him to see in what position his head over him to see in what position his head lay. I took the hatchet and raised it up to the height of the ceiling.

I was about to turn away and leave the man in peace, when I was again seized by the demon, and was forced to raise the hatchet and give the fatal blow; but it seemed as if the strength and force of the blow that I was about to implant in the head of the peaceful sleeper had all entered into the handle of the hatchet. I withheld the blow, took up the lamp and hatchet and went back to my own room, greatly troubled in mind and spirit. I was about to give a loud scream, but I had no strength for it. I sat there as had no strength for it. I sat there as helpless as a babe, when all at once a painful thrill or sting pierced my heart and brains and roused me up like a maniac.
