

re. "exchange of,

lata. Miller," 153.

, definition of political, 61-63; definition 22.

edia, induction and 7-98; Adam Smith, t monopoly of, 137,

condemnation, 137;

used in political 2, 408-409, 464; na-value, 240; value of,

255-256; when its

consequence of civi-

within the natural

and when destruction, 256; value of

265-266, and not

266, 277-278, 297,

297; can have no

ions as property,

rightfully belongs to

unity, 265; perma-

ns value, 310-312;

dependence on, 351-352;

a fundamental per-

cept, 352, this is limited, 78, 353-

the use of, made pos-

sive use of, 364;

ive factor in pro-

405-406, 408-410,

importance of observ-

, 406-407; capital

union of labor and,

reously included in

of private property,

ed by lawyers real

184; Smith avoids antagonizing, 182; true beneficiaries of protectionism, 175-176; invalidity of their right to land values, 277-278; compensation to, Mill, 137-138, Spencer, 192-193, Dove, 192-193; cannot contribute to production, 409-410; their income and the laws of distribution, 460-461.

Language, how it grows in copiousness, flexibility and beauty, 274.

Laughlin, definition of wealth, 123.

Laveleye, De, definition of wealth, 122.

Law, science deals with natural, not human, 58-60; the fundamental, of political economy, 86-91, 99, 254, 268, 332; natural, not human, the subject of political economy, 61-64, 76-77, 420, 428-429; natural law always the same, 428-429, 435-436; of nature, what it is, 435-436, 443, 452; Mill's definition, 443; the will behind it, 435-436; common perception of natural, in distribution, 440-449, Mill's admission, 440-441, 443; sequence, consequence and natural, 44-57, 440-443; human law confused with natural, in distribution, 440-441, 443, 448-449; inflexibility of, in distribution, 443-444.

Lawyers, and real property, 461.

Leverson, M. R., definition of wealth, 122.

Leviathan, Hobbes's, 22, 25-26,

27; the Greater, 22-23, 27-28,

35-36, 118, 395-396, 399-400,

428.

Logic. See Reason.

Macdonald, D. C., Ogilvie on natural rights, 185-186.

Machinery, in civilization, 379.

Macleod, H. D., definition of wealth, 122; objects to Smith's definition, 146; his confusion,

196-197; definition of economics, 129; account of the Physi-ocrats' views, 155-158.

Macavane, definition of wealth,

123.

Mæcenas, his name in Horace's odes, 310.

Malthus, definition of wealth,

121; objects to Smith's definition, 146.

Malthusian theory, 173-174, 183,

333-334; alleged law of diminishing returns in agriculture and, 335, 336, 337-338.

Man, his place and powers, 11-18,

351-352; how extended in civilization, 19-23, 29-43, 91; his earliest knowledge of his habitat, 11, and how it grows, 11-14; his physical nature, 13-18; his resemblance to other animals,

13-14, 85, 291, and distinction from them, 11-18, 19, 29, 36,

51, 53, 56, 59, 77, 82, 85, 287,

291-292, 397-399; but a passing manifestation of matter and energy, 13-14; his spiritual nature, 14-18, 29, 37-38, 84-85,

287, 307; the social animal, 21;

the artificial, in the body politic called Leviathan, 22, 25-26, 27, the still greater, in the body economic called the Greater Leviathan, 22-23, 27, 36, 118, 395-396, 399, 428; his belief in immortality, 34; resurrection from the dead, 312; distinction of the civilized, from the savage, 39-43; as comprehended in and as apart from nature, 47-48, 84-85; his laws distinct from political economy, 58-61; his actions prompted by desire, 18, 81-82, the satisfaction of which is the fundamental law of political economy, 86-91, 99, 254, 268, 332; he could not exist without desire, 83; his subjective and objective, material and immaterial desires, 83-85; in the hierarchy of life, 85; a pro-