THE FLUME AT BROOKS.

- (1) Where C.P.R. Crosses the Brooks Aqueduct.
- (2) The Aqueduct.
- (3) The interior of the Aqueduct.

THE Bassano Dam is the most important engineering work in the Eastern Section of the Canadian Pacific Irrigation Block, but it is not the only important feature by any means. Next to it in importance comes the Brooks Aqueduct. The main irrigation canal, which is fed from the lake created by the Bassano Dam, runs in an easterly direction for about five miles and then divides into two branches, one going north and the other east. The east branch, after having filled several smaller branches, discharges the bulk of its water into the Lake Newell reservoir which has been artificially formed in a depression in the hills, is nine miles long by four wide, has a storage capacity of over 50,000,000 gallons, and is designed to be filled during the non-irrigating season. Just east of the Lake Newell reservoir is a deep valley about 2 miles wide and it is for the purpose of crossing it that the Brooks Aqueduct was constructed consisting of a reinforced concrete flume 10,450 feet long with a curved cross section some 23 feet wide at the top and nearly 9 feet deep from full-flow water level to the top to the centre of the curve at bottom. It has a discharge capacity of 900 cubic feet per second, the eastern end being 4.85 feet lower than the western so as to create a grade for the water flow, and it carries water for the irrigation of 125,000 acres situated in the Bantry Hills. The flume, the walls of which are five inches thick, is suspended between horizontal girders, the whole supported by a reinforced concrete trestle made up of two lines of columns with a maximum height of 50 feet, but lower in places according to the contour of the valley. About three miles east of the town of Brooks, Alberta, the line of the aqueduct is crossed by the Canadian Pacific Ry. and, the track being at such an elevation that it was impossible to carry the flume overhead, it was necessary to build a siphon under the track. At the west side of the track the curved form of the flume is continued round and a completely circular pipe is made which dips at an angle of about 45 degrees and enters the ground, passing under the rails at a slight depth for a distance of about 55 feet when it rises again to the original level and reverts to its original form. The siphon is 9 feet 3 inches in diameter at the smallest and 12 feet 6 inches at the largest point. This is said to be the first siphon in which the peculiar form adopted has been used and the engineering problems presented considerable difficulties. That they were happily solved is proved by the fact that when the water was turned on the siphon maintained perfectly watertight under full pressure.
