The committee of the New York Legislature which conducted the investiga tion concerning life insurance opera-tions thrust a great many prominent financiers in the limelight. The in-vestigation has been concluded, the testimony has been concluded, the testimony has been digested into the form of a report, and recommendations based upon it have been handed in to the Legislature for such action as that body may see fit, and the public begins to realize the magnitude of the task performed. Italic letters were first used about the year 1500 by Ardus Manutius, a Venetian printer. He observed the many inconveniences resulting from the vast number of abbreviations which were then so frequent among the printers that a book was difficult to understand. A treatise was actually written on the art of reading a printed book and thus addressed to the learned. By introducing the italic letter he contrived an expedient by which these abbreviations might be entirely got rid of and yet books suffer little increase in bulk. He dedicated his invention to the Italian states; hence the name. It has also been distinguished by the name of the

TO PREVENT USURY.

Reflections and Reminiscences Called Up on Scanning the Hon, Chas. Fitzpatrick's Bill In House.

The efforts to put an end to usury or the loaning of money at exorbitani rates of interest, are to be commended. It is therefors to be noped that Mr. Fitzpatrick's bill dealing with this question will be made practicable, and that it will become the law of the land. It has been sent to the Committee of Banking and Commerce for the perfecthas been sent to the Committee of Banking and Commerce for the perfect-ing of its details, and thus give the atry the reasonable defence against asses to which it is entitled.

What the Measure Proposes

So far as can be gathered, the bill proposes to limit the rate of interest that the money-lender can charge to 12 per cent. on sums under $500, and to make the rate after the debt has to make the rate after the debt has fallen due no more than 6 per cent. This is a change for the better, but it is scarcely so sweeping a reform as might be expected considering the gravity of the situation, and the means that may be employed to circumvent the intent of the statute. It can readily be understood that a loan may call for a great deal more than 12 per cent, although no higher rate is mentioned although no higher rate is mentioned in the bond. All that is necessary, in in the bond. All that is necessary, in order to extort an exorbitant rate, is to require the borrower to sign for a much larger sum than he receives. By artificially increasing the principal the interest charge is swollen. What Parliament ought to do is clear. It should make certain that there is no departure from the principle it lays down.

What Britain Did.

In this connection it is of interest to note that Great Britain, afflicted by the usury evil, dealt with it in a drastic way in the year 1900. Up to that time the usury had had a clear field for unchecked operations. Wherever he could find victims he did his heavy work. In the colleges, the schools, the army, the offices, the sheps—in all places where young people were to be found—the usurer operated. The commission of enquiry exhumed the fact that the plan of procedure was the sending of a circular mentioning the convenience that a money-lending firm was to the recipient. The older people had their banks; why should not the younger have financial accommodation also? Money the young persons needed. Why not borrow it from the firm from which the circular came? The army, the offices, the shops-in al from which the circular came? The borrower would be able to satisfy his immediate needs, and nobody would be the wiser! And so the net was spread. Into it the unwary fell, with the result that he was soon heavily involved, the interest swallowing up all the money he could scrape together.

A Curse to the Country. A Curse to the Country.

The constant drag upon the victim was awful. Sometimes freedom was attained, but there were too many cases in which the unfortunate sought relief by means that ruined him for life. The Imperial Parliament dealt with the question thoroughly, and to-day usury and the ville are not so general as they and its evils are not so general as they and its evils are not so general as they at one time were. The first principle of the British law is registration. Every person who makes money-lending a business must register as such in the Inland Revenue Office, and must trade Inland Revenue Office, and must trade under the firm name by which he is registered. This gives the law a grip upon the lenders, for without registration the business cannot be followed that ground hog had taken refugive a copy of every document or security relating to the loan. Thus, there ceive a copy of every document or se-curity relating to the loan. Thus, there can be no secrecy and no misunderstood agreement. There is a fine of $500 for the first violation of this part of the law and imprisonment for three months

The Way the Toothbrush Was at First

Colonial diaries and letters make it plain that our unfortunate ancestors suffered much from jumping toothaches, swelled faces and the early loss or forcibie extraction of teeth which at a later period might have been saved to render their owners many years of further service. No wonder, since the care of the teeth was little understood, and that little often but negligently practiced.

Toothpicks were known; the toothbrush was not, although rough substitutes were employed, made of flatten ed sticks, split and pounded at one end to a stiff, fibrous fringe. Toothbrushes when first introduced were regarded as by no means important accessories to the toilet, but rather as minor luxuries and suitable for women only.

The diary of a London merchant trading to the colonies has this entry:

THE AGE OF STEEL

For Homes as Well as Office Buildings

Steel is rapidly replacing wood and mortar as a material for the interior of homes, as well as for the structural part of "sky scrapers." Metal Walls and Ceilings are more durable and sanitary than plaster, and have the still greater advantage of being absolutely fireproof. Then, too, they come in many designs that lend themselves to rich, harmonious colorschemes. Metal Shingles—which last alifetime, never rust or leak and are fire-proof and lightning proof—now take the place of wooden shingles and tin. Metal Sidings are more sanitary and more durable than brick or stone. It is desirable that if the patient smell, oils, etc., to keep a glass specially for them, letting it soak in hot wa-ter for half an hour after use to remove all disagreeable odor. It is impossible to cleanse such a glass in a few moments. When the medicine is being poured out hold the label uppermost in order that it may not become stained with any drops escaping down the side of the bottle.
