

RELIGION IN OLD IRELAND.

Stirring Address by Baptist Minister From Cork.

Rev. T. S. Metrustry In Victoria Avenue Church.

Raising Funds to Prosecute the Work at Home.

Rev. T. S. Metrustry, of Cork, Ireland, a graduate of Dunoon College, Glasgow, who is on a mission tour to Canada and the United States, preached in Victoria Avenue Baptist Church yesterday. He has been commissioned by the Home Mission Board of Ireland to visit America in the interest of the work there. He is pastor of the Baptist Church in the city of Cork, which is more than 250 years old and has the honor of being chosen chaplain of the military barracks in that city.

His subject last evening was: "Ireland and the Irish to-day." Mr. Metrustry divided the subject into three parts. The first was Ireland's position, its difficulties and its cause. He reminded the audience that Ireland was among the very first to receive the gospel, and in turn became the evangel to other countries with the good tidings, and as the ages passed on, she became known as the island of saints. The greater part of the country is under Roman Catholic faith. It is socially, commercially and religiously distressed. It is a well known fact, he said, that Roman Catholics have been behind in the race for supremacy and development, for instance, Spain, Portugal, Italy and even France. In Ireland, where the Roman Catholic and Protestant live side by side, the fact is strongly emphasized.

The north of Ireland is the Protestant stronghold. There are the well kept farms and an industrious and happy people, and every opportunity for commercial and educational development are afforded, but, in the south and west, the lands for the most part are poor, fallow or are let for grazing. The people are burdened and depressed, and notwithstanding this the soil and climate are better in the south. He pictured the magnificent scenery of the south, its lofty mountains pointing heavenward, proclaiming the glory of God; its lovely lakes, which in days of storm tell of divine power, and in days of calm mirror in clearest photograph the outline of every hill, rock and tree. And yet wherever one goes through this southern country poverty and distress are found, the majority having no mind to grasp the opportunities. The population of Cork County alone has fallen 100,000 in the last forty years, and trade is rapidly departing. The young people are fleeing from the land of distress and poverty to seek magnificent monasteries, convents, cathedrals, all erected at great cost, the money drawn from these burdened people. What is the secret of this deterioration of this unhappy land? The land which produced the pearl of the ocean and the gem of the world, this land which has contributed perhaps more than any other land to the genius of the world? Mr. Metrustry said the answer is "the priest." He controls everything, the laws of his people, the politics and religion and his subjects do not refuse to obey his mandates under a threat of future punishment.

He went on to say that in Ireland Protestantism is considerably in the minority. Out of a population of 4,500,000, Roman Catholics number 3,800,000, and the Baptists, who stand by the truth and practice the ordinance of baptism, are just about 4,000 in all. What are they among so many? But they remember what God has done with the few and true, and are encouraged.

In the second place, the speaker referred to Ireland in relation to revivals, and gave a touching and thrilling account of the revival of 1859, during which some of our own mission churches sprang into being, and which dealt a blow to the priesthood. There were signs, he said, that the revival was coming again, and their mission at the present time is thanking God for precious gleanings from the harvest in some of the darkest places of the land. They long to go to the mission fields and limit and their are appealing for aid in this crisis to their brothers beyond the sea.

Thirdly, he spoke of Ireland in relation to the Irish Baptist Home Mission. This is the second oldest Baptist mission in the world, having been founded in 1815 through the influence of a visit to Ireland by Rev. Joseph Saffrey, Salisbury, England. He came to enlist sympathy in the previous year, and five years have been one of sacrifice and churches. There have been days of persecution, where there arose against them the fires of priestly vengeance. Their brethren suffered for the love of the truth's sake, but these things moved them, and the passion for men was in their hearts. From the seed they have sown there has sprung to-day a gracious harvest. They have now nineteen chief stations and ninety sub-stations and a number of faithful pastors through whose message there throbs the deep gracious note of Calvary. They are going out into the market places to declare to their Roman Catholic countrymen, who know nothing of the old gospel, the glad message of redeeming love. Notwithstanding the angelic march of years, a deep and marked ignorance prevails in the southern parts of Ireland to-day. It is the Virgin who is worshipped, and not the Lord, the saints, the images and relics. They kiss the holy object, and are taught to hate the missions who come to them with the only message that can save.

He concluded by saying that they needed $15,000 annually for the work in Ireland, and if it were not for the kindness of sister churches in England, Scotland and Wales it would not be possible to exist. Just now they are making a special effort to reach the people of the south and west and outlying towns and villages. They require $5,000 for this campaign. This is what he came to Canada to plead for. It had been said to him that the Canadian Churches are sufficiently burdened and cannot see any room for the call from Ireland, to which he replied that the Canadian churches are reaping what they sow. They are sending thousands of Irish people every year to Canada from Ireland, most of whom are Roman Catholics. If they come as Roman Catholics they remain such. Give them the means to evangelize them, and they would come out to enrich the country.

He believed the time had come as never before to reach his countrymen who knew not God, and he pleaded earnestly for the aid of the friends on this side of the sea.

The audience responded heartily to the call and gave a large contribution to the cause. Next Sunday Mr. Metrustry goes to London, from whence he proceeds to the States.

Amusements

"THE MAN FROM HOME."

One of the most attractive features about the new play, "The Man From Home," written by Booth, Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson, which will be seen here at the Grand to-night, is the humorous blow it strikes at the folly of international marriages, a theme that is handled without gloves from the rise of the curtain until its fall. The authors have deliberately set forth with the idea of heaping ridicule upon this form of "republican insanity," and according to the success the play has achieved in Chicago and New York, have more than made good their object. The consensus of opinion in both cities is that no more entertaining play has been seen in recent years, and that its success is due as much to the homely spirit of truth as to its clean wholesome nature. The four acts are laid at the Hotel Margherita Regatta at Sorrento, Italy, and the chief figure, a lawyer from Kokomo, Ind., stands forth with unusual brilliancy, by the very reason of his foreign setting. Lieber & Company are responsible for the production, and this is a guaranty of no small nature, as those who have witnessed such plays as "The Squaw Man," "Salome Jane," "The Battle," "The Dawn of a Tomorrow," etc., are aware. The cast is one that has been carefully selected in its every detail.

KING DODO. "King Dodo" wishes to announce to all loyal subjects that his coronation, starting on the 14th inst., will certainly take place at the Grand on Thursday morning. Preparations are now on foot to give his royal majesty a reception worthy of his high rank and station. Queen Lili will assist at the coronation services and all the gay retinue will vie with one another in making this occasion one that will not be forgotten in the history of coronations. The King will bring the eminent doctor F. W. Wilson, also Pedro, the court chamberlain who will be accompanied by the sprightly Annette. That young soldier of fortune, Piola, will be much in evidence, bringing with him his little sweetheart, Angela. "There is no King but Dodo."

"FAUST AT THE GRAND." "Faust," will be the attraction at the Grand next Saturday. The story of "Faust" has been presented in this city many times, both in lyric and dramatic form, but it is said that a more spectacular version has never been seen here. "Faust," from all accounts, has taken on a new lease of life, the excellence of its principal actors, the singing of the famous double quartet, and the new features and effects introduced by the aid of magic and electricity have all combined to create a renewed interest in this famous play.

THIS WEEK AT BENNETT'S. The Bennett bill this week, devoted almost entirely to novelty and comedy, promises two hours of exceptionally pleasing entertainment. The entire lower floor of the house has been engaged for Wednesday evening when a big theatre party, under the auspices of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association will be held. Foy and Clark in their fantastic comedy, "The Spring of Youth," will be the principal laugh provoker, but the bill will never be seen in the city without a new attraction.

The Awakening of the Toys, Clifford and Burk, the noted blackface comedians in their latest comedy skit, Zinnell and Bourtelie, an original comedy duo; Jack Lee, a clever singing comedian and Savo, in a novelty comedy juggling act. Undoubtedly one of the best liked numbers on the bill will be Vinnie Daly, the clever little dancer, whose artistic performances have won her wide renown. She does fifteen minutes of swift and graceful dancing, warbles a song or two and wears a number of pretty costumes, which are effectively displayed to advantage with the aid of a beautiful velvet drop curtain, used for background. The very graph as usual will display interesting motion pictures.

MOUNTAIN THEATRE. This will be the last week at Mountain Theatre, as the Summers Stock Company closes the summer engagement here on Saturday evening next. For the closing week comedy productions will be the rule. For to-night, to-morrow and Wednesday nights the first episode of the southern comedy-drama of recognized merit will be the offering, and should be well received. On Thursday "A Bachelor's Honeymoon," one of the company's successes earlier in the season, will be repeated. On Friday "Niobe," another comedy that was well received this season, will be produced, and an excellent farce, entitled "Caught in the Rain," will close the engagement.

AT TOLEDO.

Great Gathering of General Passenger and Ticket Agents.

The American Association of General Passenger and Ticket Agents, which convened in Toledo last year in meeting in Toledo, Ohio, this year on September 14th and 15th. Mr. G. T. Bell, Assistant Passenger Traffic Manager of the Grand Trunk Railway System and Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, who is also president of the above association, left yesterday to attend the convention. It is anticipated that the meeting in Toledo this year will be a most successful one. Toledo is the third largest city in Ohio and has become the favorite summer convention place of many large organizations. Though with a population of only 200,000 people it is second only to Chicago as an American railroad center, having 23 steam railroads and 11 interurban electric lines entering the city. It is expected that the attendance at this convention will be as large as usual.

RETURN TO WORK.

Sao, Me, Sept. 13.—After an idleness of about three weeks, the 220 employees of the York mill of this town, who were thrown out of employment by the strike of 150 weavers, returned to work to-day. The weavers were back to work to-day at the old rate of wages, but the mill management promised to do something for them as soon as possible.

TIMES PATTERNS.

LADIES' WAIST.

No. 8438.—A yoke effect of tucked chiffon, net or of lace is always becoming. The waist here shown is an excellent design for chiffon, voile, messaline, chiffon taffeta, faille, or other dress fabrics. The high collar may be of the same materials as the yoke. The sleeves are small and finished with a square cuff. The fullness of the bodice is cut in 6 sizes, 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42 inches bust measure. It requires 3½ yards of 24-inch material for the 36-inch size.

A pattern of this illustration will be mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps.

It will take several days before you can get pattern.

QUEBEC---LOOKING BACKWARD

The 150th Anniversary of Its Capture by General Wolfe—September 13, 1759

(BY J. A. SINCLAIR)

Standing at the edge of the declivity, on the spot where once clustered the tents of Vergor's detachment, and looking downward to the placid river touching the very foot of the bluffs, one wonders, indeed, where and how that indomitable army of Wolfe's ever made a landing. In the darkness of that memorable night of the 13th of September, 1759, the boats must surely have been rushed with all the force of the rowers' arms up on the foot of the precipice.

The path threading to the heights through scrub and small bushes and protected in vulnerable spots by abatis, with other obstructions thrown there at this critical time, would seem to have been insurmountable, leaving the climb out of consideration altogether. Even after the men had reached the top the French and Canadian detachment had to be defended with this last, however, secured to be a minor consideration in Wolfe's mind. With his always implicit confidence in the British arms, he knew that if his men once surmounted the difficulty of the landing, the rest was with in his grasp.

Why Montcalm did not employ some of the numerous Indians encamped around the city in watching the whole line of cliffs, when he must have known their sagacity and keenness as a valuable asset to the blunt, rebellious Canadians under Vergor, is hard to understand. The Indians were at the command of the Governor, and Vaudreuil took good care that the allies of France should be ever at his beck and call. If all had been amiable between the General and the Governor, the catastrophe of the landing might have been averted and Wolfe's force hurled back demoralized, as it was a few weeks before at the Montmorency.

That Vaudreuil was to blame there is no doubt, he protected Vergor, the indecisive, with the aid of Bagot, when he knew him to be almost a traitor to the cause.

Of all the landing places, either in front or the rear of the city, Wolfe's choice was the only one. He could not dare another rush at the Montmorency, since the first episode had crowded the triple trenches with troops at every point, as he knew it to be accessible. That he thought of the cliffs in his rear lightly, must be shown by the smallness of his detachments on guard, although he had sent a battalion from the regiment of Guenne to encamp on the plains, in case the detachments were overpowered.

Why did not Vergor's flying men give this contingent the alarm? They were there for just such a purpose. They seemed to have had no knowledge that the British army was in possession of the Plains until the next morning. Guenne, too, had been ordered to move forward to the high ridge, a good half mile from Wolfe's troops, and placed their flags.

That the faint in front of the city by Saunders kept Montcalm at the tension point through the greater part of the night and caused him to mass the troops in the rear, was a mighty aid to Wolfe's plans at the rear.

Saunders, next to Wolfe, cannot receive too much honor for the success of the expedition. He has received little. Without the help of the fleet in the long days before the battle, Montcalm might have rested serenely on the rock and his troops spared the ceaseless task of following the vessels up and down the river. Saunders tired the French out and tried their patience at every opportunity by a ceaseless cannonade along the Beauport, and the manoeuvres of his sailors in small boats, making an attempt at every possible land. Holmes also gave Wolfe unstinted aid and this capable naval officer must have had some large part in the landing of the troops.

The first sign of an enemy would have been the Indians. They were encamped outside the city, and moved first, as Wolfe had to throw out skirmishers to hold them in check along both the declivities to the St. Lawrence and the St. Charles. It was an easy matter for them to ensconce themselves at both places, and fire upward from the bushes. This spattering fire bothered the flanks so much that they were ordered to lie down.

Little by little the white, uniformed French extended along the ridge, broken at all points by the Canadians loading and firing from the ground. Blasts of grape from the guns that had been so laboriously hauled up the heights also opened long lanes in the French formation. Why they did not delay their advance for reinforcements will never be known. Perhaps all the troops that the Governor could spare were on the spot, and there were no more to draw from except Bougainville's, miles around the British left, from points Montcalm had the advantage of the situation, the high ridge was a protection as well as the guns from the city walls. The British occupied extremely broad ground, which is much the same to-day.

And sitting there under the oaks and pines that cover it, one may at a glance determine both positions. From the land, the advanced troops of the British line must have been moved up considerably. Old Silly Church, where there was a French battery, is within two miles, and the battery of Samos was between, and yet Bougainville was not informed. It was the rapidity of the operation, just after dawn that helped Wolfe. The French attack was his good fortune at so early an hour. Montcalm did not wait to consider reinforcements from the army with Bougainville, but would that commander have sent them anyway if he had known? This is doubtful, there were dissensions everywhere. All were jealous except Levis, of the General of the troops from France. Montcalm always felt that should the British once gain possession of an equal fighting ground, his chances of success were small. He advanced with a determination of despair, and was hurled back from all points at once, the pursuing victors following almost to the city gates.

Wolfe was dead and Montcalm dying. The French and their allies were flying everywhere in a disorganized rout. Murray, on whose shoulders fell the mantle of command, was hastily intrenching the British forces on the field of battle.

He had good need to. A French army nearly equal to his was in the rear, and he must hold the plains at any cost. But Quebec capitulated, the suspense for the time was over, and on the flag staff of Cape Diamond the red standard of England replaced the white of old France. It was a old September day, with lowering clouds and fitful gusts of autumnal rains beating down the bombarded streets of the once stronghold of new France, when Wolfe's embalmbed body was carried on board the ship Royal William, and conveyed to England.

In the Convent of the Ursuline lay his gallant opponent, buried where a bomb had torn out a resting place for him, and where the general's skull is treasured to this day.

In the annals of history there was never yet a battle like that of Quebec. The quaintness of the setting, the combatants engaged, the broad river, the army climbing a precipice in the night, the intrepid valour of the forces engaged around a city upon which rests a halo that has been little disturbed in two hundred years.

Half a continent passed into the hands of England by the battle of Quebec, and what is there now for the predominant ing spirit of it all? Scattered up and down the Dominion Wolfe won are monoliths of granite, tablets of brass and mighty pillars rising to the clouds in honor of soldiers and statesmen, but among them all there is none to the memory of the British general, or the officers and men who fought and died in a battle whose results were the greatest at any before or since on the American continent. One hundred and fifty years have passed away, and a thousand may come and go, but the undying valor of that September day will ever remain a living and throbbing tribute in the hearts of all Canadians to General James Wolfe and the army under him.

"To-day across the victor's graves, The astonished years reveal No tribute to the gallant hero Who won our land with steel."

TENNIS

Toronto, Sept. 13.—Great weather and a galaxy of tennis cracks of first water made Saturday afternoon at the Toronto Club courts a gala day for lovers of tennis. The open event for men to settle the championship of Ontario was completed to the challenge round, and Mr. Arthur, veteran of many tournaments, will meet Mr. Robert Baird, last year's champion, for the title. Mr. Arthur defeated Mr. Dingman in the final for this privilege in a good four-set match. The younger player gave his seasoned opponent a good battle. The final of the ladies' open was the feature match of the day. Mrs. Hannam and Miss Fairbairn played for the right to enter the challenge round with Miss Moyes, and although the match went to Mrs. Hannam in straight sets her young opponent put up a great battle, and lost only because she met one of the greatest living exponents of the game among women. The match between Mrs. Hannam and Mr. Meldrum vs. Miss Summerhayes and Mr. Spenser was also good. Mrs. Hannam and Meldrum won again in straight sets, and we would venture a prediction that few pairs will be able to cope with this combination.

To-day's game at 3 p. m. between Mrs. Hannam and Miss Andras will certainly draw a large gallery. Saturday's results: Ladies' Singles.

Mrs. Hannam defeated Miss Fairbairn 6-0, 6-3.

Men's Open.

Arthur defeated Dingman (final), 6-3, 4-6, 6-1.

No. 1. Mackle defeated Weber 3-6, 6-3, 6-2.

Men's Handicap.

Weber defeated Ramsden 4-6, 6-2, 8-6.

Newland defeated Wright by default.

Land defeated Atkinson 6-3, 3-6, 6-2.

Ladies' Handicap.

Miss Summerhayes defeated Mrs. Burgess 6-3, 6-4.

Men's Doubles.

Atkinson and Wickens defeated Fawns and Taylor 6-1, 6-4.

Spenser and Dineen defeated Atkinson and Wickens 6-0, 6-3.

Scandrett and Wood defeated Kiner and Laing 6-4, 6-4.

Dingman and Henderson defeated Scandrett and Wood 6-3, 6-2.

Martin and McTavish defeated Locke and partner by default.

Land and Parton defeated Chambers and Newland 6-2, 6-1.

Boulton and Meldrum defeated Davidson and Langridge 6-4, 6-4.

Mixed Doubles.

Miss Sheppard and Brown defeated Miss Evans and Chambers 6-4, 6-1.

Miss Graham and Henderson defeated Miss Hunt and Langridge 6-0, 6-1.

Miss Andras and Parton defeated Mrs. Cox and Martin 6-0, 6-2.

Mrs. Hannam and Meldrum defeated Miss Summerhayes and Spenser 6-2, 6-2.

Miss Fairbairn and Nordheimer defeated Mrs. Cooper and Ramsden 7-5, 5-7, 6-2.

Ladies' Doubles.

Miss Andras and Miss Fairbairn defeated Mrs. Cox and Miss Graham 6-1, 6-3.

THE TRIGGER

There was a good attendance of ladies and members of the Hamilton Gun Club on Saturday afternoon, it being Ladies' Day. It was an ideal afternoon and a good programme was arranged by the committee. The feature was the shooting contest for the ladies, for which five prizes of cut glass were given. Mrs. Hackett won the first prize, Miss Hackett, second; Miss Fletcher, third; Mrs. Wark, fourth, and Miss Scott, fifth. Refreshments were served and a social time spent. On account of the hunting season there will be no more regular shoots till November. The scores made by the members were as follows:
