HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Hon. Mr. WHELAN—We have the facts established in the case of the Duke of Cornwall and in Her Majesty's instructions for the army already mentioned.

Hon. Mr. HAVILAND—They put up an offensive piece of work, and we have to thank Mr. WHELAN for his speech on Sunday, the 17th, which was a masterpiece.

Hon. Mr. WHELAN—I think not his own, but the property of his constituents, and a higher power for the inalienable principles of liberty, which the hon. member from Georgetown speaks of so frequently.

Hon. Mr. HAVILAND—Had it not been for William and Cromwell, I would not give much for your liberty now; that is my idea of the matter according to my knowledge.

Hon. Mr. WHELAN—We are a slave then, you would be one too. The cause is petty and contemptible; for, if slavery has any badge it is that of contempt, and servility is a necessary adjunct to the badge.

Hon. Mr. HAVILAND—I beg the hon. member's pardon, I did not; and after I had made the remarks to which I refer, the hon. member from Georgetown read the Orange oath.

Hon. Mr. WHELAN—I beg the hon. member's pardon, I did not; and after I had made the remarks to which I refer, the hon. member from Georgetown read the Orange oath.

Hon. Mr. COLES—It has not been denied yet. Hon. Mr. WHELAN—Yes, it has been denied. I do not believe in the Orange oath, but I believe in the kind of recognition in any of their principles, and it was highly improper in the hon. member to make such an unfounded statement.

Hon. Mr. WHELAN—I beg the hon. member's pardon, I did not; and after I had made the remarks to which I refer, the hon. member from Georgetown read the Orange oath.
