LENINE'S CONDITION WAS SERIOUS.

LONDON, June 9. From sources which cannot be doubted it is learned that Premier Lenin's condition up to a few days ago was regarded at Moscow as critical and probably hopeless, although there is no word as to what change the intervening days may have brought. These advices state the recent stroke was one of cerebral paralysis. He lost his speech entirely on June 1st, and was expected to die any day. The Late Mrs. Jno. F. Morris.

The announcement of the death of Johanna, daughter of the late Valentine Merchant and widow of the late John F. Morris, will be read with regret by the older natives of St. John's both in the city and in Canada and United States. Mrs. Morris was one of a large family who in years gone by occupied a prominent position socially and commercially in the city. They were one of the oldest families in St. John's, and were always held in the highest esteem in the days when all the residents of the city knew each other and were good friends and neighbours. She was a clever and talented girl. She was one of the first pupils of the Mercy Convent, where she acquired a finished education which in addition to her pleasing appearance and charming manner placed her in the front ranks of the young ladies of her time. She married John F. Morris, at that time one of the most brilliant members of the intellectual set of the city, and who was for some years Professor of St. Bonaventure's College in its palmiest days. He was a brother of Lord Morris and Hon. Judge Morris. By a curious coincidence Mrs. Morris's funeral takes place on the anniversary of her husband's death, which occurred on June 10, just thirty-five years ago, at Woodstock College, the then residence of the ever venerated Father Michael P. Morris, who was at that time the resident Priest at Topsail, and whose memory will be esteemed always as the founder of the first Catholic Orphanage for boys at Villa Nova. During her married life Mrs. Morris was always a prominent figure in social circles, as an active participant in all the efforts that were made by the good ladies of the city in the blessed names of charity and mercy. She lived to a ripe old age, having survived her late husband by nearly another life time. Of late very few outside her immediate circle of friends and neighbours ever met her, and her last years were a preparation for her entry into that land where there is no death or parting. Her end was peaceful and resigned, and many friends of hers and her family, both at home and abroad, when they hear of her demise will breathe a fervent prayer for the eternal repose of her soul.—COM.

SIDE TALKS.

ANY WOMAN CAN.

Give two women exactly the same clothes give them equally attractive features and figures, and one would still look far more attractive than the other if they differed in a certain respect.

The respect to which I refer is in regard to grooming.

If one woman knew how to put her clothes on well and groom herself properly, and the other didn't, there would still be a big difference in their appearance.

What Grooming Means.

Grooming of course includes many things—bathing, the care of the nails and the hair, the care of the skin and the care of the clothes themselves. When we speak of a well-groomed woman we mean a woman "immaculately clean" (that goes without saying) with well-kept hands, hair shampooed at proper intervals and attractively dressed, shoes well shined and not run down at the heels, clothes properly pressed and brushed.

Putting on the clothes well is another branch of the same art. It is really marvelous how different clothes put on carefully can look from the same clothes that are just scrambled into. It is interesting to watch a woman who has a talent for putting on her clothes well as she adjusts herself to her gown or her gown to herself. (I don't really know which it is), places a hat at just the right angle, and lefty arranges that final test of feminine skill at adjusting clothes—the veil.

The Placing of a Hat.

There is no better touchstone of the different effect clothes can give when properly and improperly put on than the placing of a hat. We all know that a hat never looks quite the same at home as it does when Madame of the hat Shop deftly lowers it at just the right angle upon our heads and she stands back to hypnotize us with admiration while the birds us regard ourselves in a carefully chosen mirror, carefully placed in the most flattering of lights. Part of the hat's greater charm at this time is the effect of the lights, the becoming color and the excitement of a new hat, but part is also Madame's perfect art in the matter of placing. There are some amateurs, to be sure, who acquire such virtuosity as the professional that they are comparatively few.

Let the amateur be carelessly put on, too far back and with not enough cant to one side and it may cease entirely to be coming.

Absolutely perfect grooming, like perfection in anything, is the result of an innate capacity for taking pains, and of a willingness to spend a great deal of time. It is an admirable thing to have if you've the time to spend; it is as perfect clothes are an admirable thing to have if you have the money that you have the right to and that way.

One May Back Too Much.

But one can spend time unjustifiably as well as money. With both it must be a question of the things you want and what you can afford to spend. A woman whose sister has the reputation of being perfectly groomed told me of a visit the latter
