George Ginger, scarred my cellar door, and put my cow in pound; I said, "I'll even up the score before a year rolls round. I always pay my debts in full, the good ones and the bad; and vengeance I will wait upon that erring lad." With endless patience I will wait until a chance I find to visit wrath upon the skater who smote me from behind. And so I watched that Ginger Jay, while weeks and months rolled by; I knew that that on some fateful day my chance I would enjoy. At last this George was stricken down by sickness fell and died, and from his fetlocks to his crown his tendons seemed afe. His little savings soon were gone, and want was at the door, his halidom was put in pawn, and all the clothes he wore. "This is the chance," I softly said, "for which I've waited long; I'll visit him, and though in bed, he'll pay for every wrong." I called upon him then and there, a basket in my hand, and it was filled with viands fair, with

Just Folks.
 By EDGAR GUEST.
 "I'M HUNGRY, Ma!"
 This is what the youngsters say:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Hear it forty times a day:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Breakfast over, in by nine.
 Come those healthy tykes of mine
 With this most appealing whine:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Meals can't stop this common cry:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Stuff them full, and still they sigh:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Scarcely seems the dinner done
 When into the house they run,
 Two, that loudly shout as one:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Feed them cookies. Still they wail:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Here's a plea that cannot fail:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Age, with appetites worn out,
 Stands aghast and seems to doubt
 Such a most incessant shout:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Hear it when they start for bed:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Last thought of each drowsy-head:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 And I chuckle soft and low
 As I hear it, for I know,
 Once I shouted long ago:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Hope to hear it, 'till I die:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 There's no lovelier call or cry:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"
 Glad the spot where day by day
 Healthy youngsters romp and play
 Often coming home to say:
 "I'm hungry, Ma!"

Marseilles Police Rout Communists
 Marseilles, France, Aug. 24.—The Communist Congress, after listening yesterday to "grievances of the Mediterranean fleet" as presented by three uniformed blue-jackets, and speeches by Deputies Cachin, Marty and Doriot, passed a resolution protesting against war in general and the war in Morocco in particular, and then went out and fought a battle with the police who objected to the formation of a Red flag parade. The police won and routed the Reds, with ten casualties among the police force and the capture of numerous prisoners.
 In the meantime at the other end of the city the Workers' Socialist Internationale, under the presidency of the United States Congressman Victor Berger, worked steadily through a weighty programme, the principal item on which was the question of Socialists taking office in "bourgeois" governments, international relations and the extension and consolidation of the League of Nations. The speakers included Arthur Henderson and Noel Buxton, of England, Dr. Rudolf Hiltnerding of Germany, and Leon Blum of France.
 No incident arose to ruffle the academic calm of the proceedings but it is understood that the meetings of the committees which preceded the public session were livelier, and for this reason, it is supposed that members of the press, except those representing Socialist organs, were excluded.

A Nasturtium Pickle
 All country people know of nasturtium pickle. They use the seed of the plant when making "capers" sauce—and many say boiled mutton tastes better when the substitute appears.
 In any case it is certainly successful. All sorts of methods are used in preserving the seeds: each household, as a rule follows its own simple mode. We set to work as soon as the blooms are off and directly the knobs have formed: the seeds are small, thin, and tender, and their colour is vividly green. For three days they lie in salted water, which is changed and made fresh as many times.
 Then a cold pickle is prepared of white wine vinegar, diluted with a dash of sherry if we want the pickle especially good. Some peppercorns and cloves are added too, and the drained seeds are put in this. As others are picked and soaked in the brine they and their way in with the rest.
 We let several weeks elapse before we touch it: then we use it as a simple pickle, or with it make "capers" sauce. The flavour, is identical, and it certainly helps on those days when fate ordains boiled mutton on the menu!

Crime Growing Through Canada
 SUMMARY OF YEAR'S COURT CASES SHOWS GENERAL INCREASE.
 Crime is on the increase in Canada, according to a report just issued from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, summarizing judicial cases for the year ending September 30th, 1924, and comparing records with those of a similar period ending September 1923. There was an increase of 7,778 cases recorded, the total criminal cases for 1923-24 being 171,902 for all provinces. There were 16,258 convictions for indictable offences and 187,219 convictions for non-indictable offences and juvenile delinquency. The latter record is not included in the first, total since juvenile delinquency is dealt with in a separate report.

Little Jack Rabbit
 by David Cory

Old Red Rooster's cock-a-do So early in the morn Made Uncle Lucky sit upright And give a sleepy yawn. Then out of bed he hopped forthwith To dress himself with care, And after parting down his back His tangled furry hair. He hopped downstairs without his shoes To read the daily morning news.

Of course the dear old gentleman rabbit had pulled on his old carpet slippers. Yes, indeed. "Barefoot boy, with cheek of tan," didn't appeal to the bunny man. There might be a splinter lying in wait for his pinkie. The older he grew, the more careful became Uncle Lucky; except with his money. Money and kindness, according to the generous old gentleman rabbit, were meant to be given away.

Already in the kitchen Little Miss Mousie was busy with the breakfast. The hot carrot cakes and the lettuce leaf marmalade looked mighty inviting as dear Uncle Lucky sat down at the table, and the water kettle on the tiny black stove tried its best to say in a sing-song way:

Bring the little brown tea-pot. I am ready, boiling hot."

"I need a spool of cotton," remarked Little Miss Mousie, as she seated herself at the table opposite the dear old gentleman rabbit. "Are you going to the Three-in-One Cent Store today?"

"Suppose you come along with me," suggested dear Uncle Lucky. "I'll pick some raspberries while you clean the table. Put on your pinkie bonnet with the yellow daisies on it," and slipping his napkin neat and trim into the pretty silver ring, the old gentleman rabbit tucked a basket under his arm and hopped out to the garden.

"Hey, there," he shouted to the Old Red Rooster, "better pick some tomatoes; fill one of the crates and I'll take them down to the Three-in-One Cent Store. We have more than we can ever use."

As soon as the berries were picked and the crate of tomatoes placed in the Luckymobile, Little Miss Mousie tripped down the path under the grape arbor to the little red garage, and in a few minutes she and the dear old gentleman rabbit were rolling down Lettuce Avenue. As they neared Cabbage Street, he drew up at the curb to say good morning to the little old lady duck who kept the candy stand. Dear Uncle Lucky, always so kind to everyone. No wonder he was loved by all. "How's business?" he asked in a cheery voice. "By the way, send a bushel of peanuts to the Bunny Orphan Asylum," and taking out his leather wallet, he peeled off five lettuce leaf dollars bills. Then with a hunk of the horn away he sped, he and Little Miss Mousie, for the spool of cotton.

All of a sudden, just like that, quick as the wind that blows off your hat, Danny Fox jumped out from behind an old ash can. "Uncle Lucky! Uncle Lucky!" he shouted,

"Stop for just a minute or two, I want to have a word with you."

"Please don't," begged Little Miss Mousie, with a frightened look. And in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.

Ontario has the doubtful honor of holding first place in 63 branches of crime with Quebec second, generally with a large margin between the two ranks and another large drop from Quebec's total to that of the province which happens to follow. In the other branches of crime Quebec is first with Ontario second.

The branches in which Quebec holds the lead are murders, 10; shooting, stabbing and wounding, 66; offences against the inspection and sales Acts, 101; non-payment of wages, 277; breach of trade marks, 28; conspiracy, 13; keepings, or being inmates of, disorderly houses, 289; frequenting disorderly houses, 2,209; offences against revenue laws, 165; offences against opium and narcotic drugs, Act, 234; disturbing religious and like meetings, 10.

Applied ribbon flowers and bead embroideries are an evening frock. Features of wood frocks are long, slashed tunics and long, fitted sleeves.

Godets become noticeably fuller. Many of the new evening wraps are reversible. A style feature of the dress coat is the cape back. Evening frocks are only truly decorative in back.

The skirt length remains unchangeably short. Fur evening wraps are lined with rich tinsel brocades. Top-coats show a keen interest in belts and pockets. Hardly an afternoon frock is seen without a tunic or a tie. The longer suit coat is more becoming to a mature figure.
