exploring the Secret of Magnetic Eyes

The eye is the window of the soul This has often been said, writes Henry de Varigny in L'Echo de Paris, and every one knows by experience see what may be found at the bo that is to say, in his personalit instinctively distrust the m no does not look us in the eye; egard him as a deceiver, and the fact that his eye will not meet ours aken to mean that he is afraid of hetraying himself, of allowing us to find out that if he says "yes," he will not act accordingly despite his assurances. Then, too, we read further: "There is a sort of antagonism be-tween glances of the eye. Two persons can not long sustain each other's steady gaze. After a few instants, the eyes turn away, as if, on both sides, there was an impression of having committed or undergone some indiscretion.

"There is no one, besides, who does not find an insistent gaze disagreeable. What does this person want? we ask ourselves. And we turn away our eyes, to see whether the gaze will continue. There is at once antagonsm and attraction, which later may go so far as to become fascination. "Another thing still. We sometimes hear people boast of exercising an attraction, of obliging a person, by steady look, to turn around and look at them. This is always an exagger ation. The experiment has been made by an American psychologist. It consisted in finding out whether subject placed in the rear rows of an audience really could force a person in front of him to turn around, this subject being a chance selection. Thus made, the experiment always fails. It succeeds, on the contrary, if the two persons can see one another without its being necessary for Mechanics, Labourers and the 'fascinated' person to turn around other workmen will be paid and if the active subject has taken care previously to attract the attention of the passive one by looking a vices rendered or goods sup-plied will be paid fortnight-at the passive, the latter will notice

"The essential thing is to find an experimental detector of the invisible ray capable of reacting on the gaze some form of electric or electromagnetic radiation. This is how he bin of metallic wire, forming a solenoid, in a metal chamber, connected to earth and having a glass window The bobbin was hung by a silk thread having no torsion, whose other end was attached to a stopper that closed a cylindrical chimney surmounting the chamber, and about a foot long. The two ends of the spiral forming the bobbin were connected. Above the bobbin, at right-angles with it, was a small magnet to keep it fixed in one direction. Under the bobbin, on the floor of the chamber, was a graduated circle so that the position taken in the coil, this will become magnetic and tend to place its axis parallel to that of the small magnet. The apparatus is allowed time to settle into a position of equilibrium, and then the experimenter looks steadily at the bobbin. This alters its direction, and when it stops turning, the eye is turned away. The bobbin then takes up its initial position. The deviation, which is slight, is then noted. The movement occurs in 5 seconds, and may be as great as 30 degrees in dry weather; it is smaller and slower in moist weather with low barometer But it is also obtained, the more slowly, by means of a light ray. In a vacuum it is less.

The author's opinion is that the body, the brain, and especially the eye, emit a radiation of electric or electromagnetic waves. some points of the body than at others. While the statesmen were doing this Bengal lights lit up the building there was another burst of cheering.

Mr. Chamberlain said to-night that his only regret was that the nations represented could not themselves have heard the moving declarations which marked the end of the conference. He added that, for those who were present, the closing words spoken by M. Briand (the French Foreign Minister) and Dr. Stresemann would be an imperishable memory. He was convinced that they had accomplished a great work, and and that what they had done was only the beginning of the task.

Mr. Chamberlain stated that he had been faithful to the declarations he had made in the House of Commons, and that the British commitments did not go farther than that. It is understood that the evacuation of Cologne will take place in the near future.

(Mr. Chamberlain stated in the House of Commons, on June 24 last, that any new obligations undertaken by Great Britain would be limited to "the maintenance of the existing territorial arrangement on the Western frontier of Germany," and that the Government was not prepared to assume fresh obligations elsewhere.)

The initialled documents are a reaty between Germany, Belgium, France, Great Britain, and Italy, and arbitration treaties between Germany, Belgium, France, Poland, and Czecho-Slovakia.

Accords between France, Poland, and Czecho-Slovakia, reinforcing the treaties, have also been concluded.
