

years career, as a teacher, with great gratitude. In his connection with the Rockwood Academy he felt that his life was not altogether lost, and it was with deep gratification that he had heard the expressions of thankfulness by those pupils who had attended the Academy, and that in some measure he had been the means of helping them to an earnest and noble life. Mistakes he had made, but he asked his dear old scholars to look upon the errors he had committed as those of the head and not of the heart. He would ever think tenderly of them, as he hoped they would of him.

Mr. B. Cochran then read the following address:

Messrs. McCaig and McMillan:

DEAR SONS—In assembling once more in this familiar and of remembered locality, the scene of so many pleasant and happy hours, our spirits quicken when our memories revert to those by-gone days and think of those others, who with us, side by side, quaffed the same sweets of knowledge and in the words of the poet

"Were nursed upon the self-same hill,
Fed the same flock by fountain shade and rill."

The rapturous hours, too, which were spent in those class-rooms, where we were taught to regard the mind as something palpable, and "the soul's immortality as something visible," will linger long in our recollections. It affords us pleasure to have an opportunity of again clasping the hands of friends in whose society we have spent so many pleasant hours, and from whom we have been so long separated, to retrospect with them upon the past and prospect the future. Who of us has not felt his heart grow large at the sight of a student friend, one who has read the same familiar and friendly books, who has sat and listened to words of instruction from respected teachers? It is with emotions of such a nature that we avail ourselves of the opportunity afforded by this reunion to express to you formally our sincere regard and esteem, as teachers who have labored faithfully and earnestly for our advancement. The instruction we received from you has been of such practical utility to us since we have begun our own battle with the world as to justify us in now reverting to our sojourn at your Academy not only as one of the most pleasant but most profitable periods of our lives. After an auspicious establishment of Rockwood Academy under its founder, Mr. Wetherald, to which such proper and happy allusion has been made in the address first read, it must have been highly gratifying to himself, as well as to all well-wishers of the Institution, to observe that in your hands the objects of its foundation were continued and extended in such a satisfactory manner. Those of us who have been pupils since the retirement of Mr. McCaig can assure you, Mr. McMillan, that we consider the Academy under your management is still steadily spreading its popularity, as is evidenced by the number of students attracted to it, not only from our own Province but from the neighboring Republic; and we are proud to know that your untiring zeal to maintain and still further increase its reputation and usefulness is manifested by the employment, as assistants from time to time, of such thorough and practical teachers as Messrs. D. H. Hunter, B. A., and W. J. Ferguson, B. A., whose sympathy and co-operation with us in our studies, along with your own invariable painstaking efforts for our advancement, have contributed so largely towards any measure of success we may have acquired. In addition, we may refer in passing to the importance of the present opportunities that are afforded us in the form of resolutions of a sound education, for there are many storms to be encountered in this life, so that it becomes us every one to guard our footsteps well, in order that the bright hopes and promises of our early youth be not changed in maturer years to a vain asking of the past what it can never give back. May we rather be like those

"Whose high endeavors are an inward light
That makes the path before them always bright."

The Committee, on behalf of the students.

Mr. McCaig in reply said he was greatly pleased to meet so many to-day who after so many years of separation had come together to renew the affections of old times. When he saw such scenes as were witnessed to-day he had always a hope for humanity—and that it was capable of raising and elevating our fallen natures. If this meeting was a pleasure to him, what must it be to the founder of the Academy? His connection with it was but short, and he had not experienced all the troubles and anxieties that Mr. Wetherald had. The present meeting was like a green oasis—a pleasant interlude in the teacher's life, who often thinks his labors go for naught. The meeting here to-day was an evidence to the contrary, for after all the struggles and discouragements, such a demonstration as this was a proof that his efforts were appreciated. He concluded by again thanking the students for this pleasing and gratifying expression of their kindness.

Mr. McMillan said he heartily endorsed the sentiments expressed by Mr. McCaig. The feeling of good that those in their position were able to do, and the practical benefit that they were the humble instruments in accomplishing, was to him the strongest incentive to work. This feeling, and a reciprocal one that sprung up in the minds of the pupils, formed a strong chord of attachment, of which they had good evidence to-day. As he grew in experience the truth of this was the more firmly impressed on his mind. It was his aim and effort to cultivate such feelings, and to continue to extend it in his daily intercourse with the pupils. The address referred in flattering terms to his efforts, but he would give his students equal credit for their efforts, and for their anxiety to secure success. It had often been a matter of astonishment to find so many young men so full of spirit, so exemplary in their conduct, and so careful of every regard to property. He referred in grateful terms to the valuable assistance he had received from his old associate Mr. McCaig, from Mr. Hunter, and from his present assistant, Mr. Ferguson. To them as well as to the students, the credit was due for a great deal of the success of the Academy. As long as God spared him it would be his effort to maintain the good name and efficiency of the Institution, and though the remuneration was small, yet he would have the satisfaction in the conviction that he was doing some practical good in fitting the young men to occupy useful—if not honorable—positions in life.

Dr. McCullough, Secretary of the Committee, was then called on. He said it was a blessing to meet so many familiar faces, and exchange recollections with old school fellows. It was a great pride to them to have such an Institution in Rockwood, to which gathered your men from all parts of the Dominion and even the States. He congratulated those now in charge of it on the success that had attended their labors; and hoped it would continue to prosper, and that young men would continue to flock to it from all parts, who in after years would do credit to themselves and the Academy.

Mr. L. L. Bowman, of Berlin, one of the oldest pupils, was also asked to speak. He was much pleased to revisit the old scenes, and meet with so many of the old students. Since the day he had left the Academy, twenty-four years ago, he had not seen it till to-day, and was gratified at the great change that had taken place. He spoke of the great benefit he had received at the Academy, for which he had all his life felt grateful. There was indeed a reunion to-day of many thoughts and feelings and associations, and he felt happy and honored in having the opportunity of saying how pleased he was in meeting them all. He trusted that the Institution would continue to be the instrument in doing much good, that its popularity would increase, and that it would continue to be held in high appreciation. They would certainly never all meet again, but he earnestly hoped that all—teachers and pupils—would have another reunion, that they would live so as to secure the home above, beyond the grave, at the right hand of God.

Mr. John Weir, of Flamboro, then moved a vote of thanks to the Committee who had done so much to make the Reunion a success.

Dr. Strange seconded the motion, and briefly expressed his pleasure at being present on such a happy occasion.

The motion was carried, and Mr. A. D. Hill responded in appropriate terms.

Another pleasing incident, just before separating, was the presentation, by Mr. Wetherald's old pupils, of a purse of money to that gentleman, who was very much affected by such a proof of the love and respect they entertained for their old teacher.

The Band then played "God Save the Queen," and the Re-union terminated at six o'clock, all being highly pleased with the day's proceedings. To Mr. Hill, and the other members of the Committee, much credit is due for the efforts they made to carry out the arrangements.

The nomination for West Peterborough was held on Tuesday. Mr. D. M. Dumble was nominated as the Reform candidate, and W. B. Scott as the Conservative candidate.

A debate is to be held in the Church of the United Brethren, Waterloo, on the 6th July, to continue for a week, on the question "Resolved—that man in his present state is entirely mortal, and falls by the power of death into a state of total unconsciousness, till the resurrection."

An Oswego paper says that the Canadian steamers which have been running on the American side of Lake Ontario have been withdrawn and placed on the route between Quebec and Montreal. The result will probably be the establishment of a new American line.
