[Copyright by Sam Loyd, New York.]

Brown, the liveryman, says that the other night three of the letters in his electric sign "went out," and that those three letters, without rearrangement, peculiarly enough, correctly spelled a word. But what was more remarkable was that the remaining five letters also spelled a word. Can you tell which three letters "went out"?

THE LOST MILLIONAIRE

BY L. CAMPBELL DAVIDSON.

CHAPTER XXVII.—
Suter's Message.

He opened his eyes to a huge, long room, white and plain, and just before him was a tall window where the light fell full. Someone came and stood over him.

He opened his lips with a sudden start and cried out: "The train! She's on us! Good God!" Then, as a face in a white cap came round into his vision, he clutched his hands in the coverlet over him and cried again with urgency, "Save yourself! Run, be quick! You're a dead woman!"

Patterns
DESIGNED BY MARTHA DEAN.

NO. 185—A NATTY LITTLE SUIT.
Boy's dress with knickerbockers. Cut in sizes 3, 4, 5 and 6 years. The 4-year size will require 3 yards of 36-inch material. Blue linen was used in the development of this jaunty little suit, but galatea, pique and serge may all be used in the making. Little knickerbockers are included in the pattern. They are shaped by the usual inside and outside seams, the fulness at the knee held in place by an elastic. A belt of leather or of the same material may be worn around the waist.

A pattern of this illustration will be mailed to any address on receipt of 10 cents in silver or stamps.

tion, and he passed his unimpaired hand across his forehead. "I'm glad it's nothing worse, because I can get up presently, can't I? I've got a journey to make to the north."

The nurse's eyebrows were raised under her black fringe of hair. "You won't make any journeys for a while yet," she said smoothly. "That cut in your arm's got to be healed first. We can't let you out of bed till that's done."

"Oh, I say, nurse! But you'll have to heal it up, then, as quick as ever you can! How long will it be, do you think? Nature's a wonderful person for repairing injuries."

"She can do a lot; but she can't heal a wound in less than a certain time. You'll have to have patience, that's all." In her heart she thought him a poor specimen to grumble over a few days in bed when his life had been miraculously spared.

"A week!" Suter's tone was horrified. "But I can travel, then, of course?"

"Well, we'll wait and see. Very likely it will be a little longer than that."

Suter lay on his pillow with a groan. To have this check in his way, just when the end was so near! It was bitter, bitter! To his excited imagination it was a wrong to Dickie's mother to leave her another day without her son. What must he do? He thought and thought till his brain reeled. To wait another fortnight, perhaps! Impossible! Dickie must go to her at once, even if he robbed himself of the pleasure of himself giving him back to Mrs. Melville.

He turned from side to side till the nurse remonstrated. "Now, if you go on like that, it'll be three weeks you'll have to be in hospital. Keep quiet. It's the only way to get better. Every time you turn like that you hurt yourself. You must keep quiet."

"I'll keep quiet if you let me see the boy!" groaned Suter; but his nurse was inexorable. "In a day or two. It all depends on how you are."

That was enough for Suter. He lay like a log, resolutely, and the nurse was pleased to praise him for his docility.

He was so well the next morning that the nurse asked the doctor whether he might see the boy. The doctor came and stood by the bed, looking down at him.

"I tell you I shan't improve till I see the little chap," said Suter, doggedly.

The doctor shook his head. "All right, I'm a father, myself. Of course, you want to see the little fellow. You shall have him here when you like. I sent down to the hotel to ask about him when I heard you were worrying. He's as right as a trivet, but, of course, you want to make sure of it, don't you? Quite natural, quite natural! The little boy's to come and see his father as soon as he comes here, nurse, remember."

Suter privately grinned with exultation at having got the better of his nurse. In his weakness she seemed to him an abominable tyrant.

When the door at the end of the long ward opened and he saw the nurse come in with a little boy by the hand he had had work to restrain himself. He held him in till the little figure suddenly dragged its hand from the hand of the nurse and a cry of "Oh, that's him!" and a little form was flung across his bed.

The outraged nurse arrived in another second, and would have plucked him from the patient's chest but that Suter held him fast with his unimpaired arm. "That's all right! He doesn't hurt," he said, looking up into the nurse's face with his clear eyes. "It does me good, I swear it does! It's the medicine I've pinned for!" And Dickie clung and nestled, and the nurse was fain to leave them alone.

When she came back to the hour to take the boy away Suter let him go with a kiss. "You'll come again tomorrow, old chap," he said, as the freckled face puckered. "Go along now. Be a good, plucky boy."

When the last trace of the little, quaint figure had vanished through the door of the ward, Suter called the nurse to him. "It seems it's no use," he said with a groan. "I'm as weak as a rat, though I loathe myself for it. I'll have to send the child on alone. Do you know of any decent woman I could trust to take the child to his mother for me? I must find someone."

The nurse considered, her forehead puckering. "Yes, I think I do," she said. "There's a woman who used to be a servant here, and now she's living on a little income in her own. She'd do it for you, I'm pretty sure. I'll speak to her tonight."

Suter's next question was a little hesitating. He did not know how it would be taken. "And, nurse, I want to write two notes, just notes," coaxingly. "Not letters, I may, mayn't?"

The nurse looked dubious. "I'll write them for you, if you like. Oh, I suppose they're private?" as Suter looked faintly dismayed. "Well, if they're really short notes—mind, not letters—and you are very careful, perhaps it might be managed."

The nurse brought him pen and ink and paper and a pencil. "You'd better use the pencil," she said, "but I thought I'd direct the envelopes for you, if you liked."

He found the offer a useful one to accept. His hand wobbled curiously and the exertion of writing the few lines made him hot. One note was to Violet. Only, "My Darling—There was a railway accident, and I'm in the hospital with a cut, but I'm nearly all right."

The other was to Mrs. Melville. That, too, was short: "Dear Mrs. Melville—I've found your boy, and I send him to you. Yours, Max Suter."

He lay on his pillow with complete exhaustion, and watched the nurse neatly and rapidly directing the envelopes at his dictation. "Jove, how odd it seems that I once made no more of writing than you do!" he said enviously. She put the folded notes into his envelopes and stuck them both. Later on, Suter was allowed to see the woman the nurse had spoken about.

She was an elderly woman, respectable and capable. Suter gave her exact directions in the task he was intrusting to her. "You are to take the child by train to York and then change into another train to Sandforth. Take a cab at the station and

A WOMAN'S BACK WAS NOT MADE TO AGHE.

Thousands of Women Suffer Untold Misery Every Day With Aching Backs That Really Have No Business To Ache.

Under ordinary conditions it ought to be strong and ready to bear the burdens of life.

It is hard to do housework with an aching back. Backaches come from sick kidneys, and what a lot of trouble sick kidneys cause.

But they can't help it. If more work is put on them than they can stand it is not to be wondered that they get out of order.

Backache is simply a warning from the kidneys and should be attended to immediately so as to avoid years of terrible suffering from kidney troubles.

Doan's Kidney Pills will cure you in the same way as they have cured thousands of others.

Mrs. O. Warren, Radisson, Sask., writes: "I was troubled with very severe pains in my back for years. I tried everything I could think of, but they did me no good. A friend told me about Doan's Kidney Pills and after taking two boxes, I have not been troubled since."

Good Cough Medicine for Children. The season for coughs and colds is now at hand, and too much cannot be used to protect the children. A child is much more likely to contract diphtheria or scarlet fever when he has a cold. The quicker you cure his cold the less the risk. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is the sole reliance of many mothers, and few of them who have tried it are willing to use any other. Mrs. F. Sturges, of Ripley, W. Va., says: "I have never used anything other than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for my children, and it has always given good satisfaction." This remedy contains no opium, other narcotic, and may be given as confidently to a child as to an adult."

is a revelation to housekeepers. Nothing like it has ever been made before. It means less work, because it does not get dull or brown, and is so easily applied.

It means less work, too, because just a few rubs bring a bright, brilliant polish that always looks fresh and clean. It is cheapest, because you get a bigger can for the money.

If your dealer does not handle "Black Knight," send his name and 10c for full sized can.
