FRENCH SCIENTIST

PRODUCES FROG

Out of Eggs With Which He Experimented, Only One Tadpole is Alive.

Paris, Aug. 18.— Scientific circles have been aroused here by the announcement in the newspapers that Batillon, a French scientist, has at last solved the great problem of science and succeeded in creating life. But the original statements are now modified.

Batillon says: "Loeb in America and Delage in France have succeeded in producing life artificially from the egg of a sea urchin, which is the lowest form of animal life. My own experiments have been along similar lines, except that I have succeeded in creating a frog.

"It was done with an egg, which was produced in a manner similar to that followed in making the sea urchin." "The process was long and uncertain. Out of 160,000 eggs with which i have experimented not more than 460 have produced in a manner similar to that followed in making the sea urchin.
