"The 613 DUNDAS ST. mothers didn't like it at all, and this is amongst the indignant passengers."

At Rectory street, Lane offered to take over the motorman's job, so he stopped the car and the conductor called a policeman instead. Lane told Magistrate Judd that he left work about 2:30 in the afternoon, and his brother testified that he was sober at half-"You deserve to go to jail for this," the magistrate told him. "You interfered not only with the men in charge of the car, but inconvenienced the public, too. cause you are not in the habit of doing this kind of thing. I will be lenient."

FOURTH GREAT MOVEMENT

Lane was fined $10 and costs.

Militant Suffragism Successor to Women's Previous Struggles, Says John Cottam. "Militant suffragism is the fourth great woman's movement within the last century," declared John Cottam before the Culturist Society in St. George's Hall last evening. "The first was the struggle a century ago to retain the right to work for their family, which right was taken from them by the innovation of machinery to replace the spinning-wheel and loom.

struggle for education, and this battle was won by the women. Then followed the movement in the seventies for the right to enter the business world, and this was also crowned with success. Now comes the greatest movement, a movement which will have its highest aim the purifying of social conditions, and the revision of present marriage conditions. The woman will become the aroiter of her children."

Dealing with the biological side of feminism, Mr. Cottam, in plain words depicted conditions at present, and stat ed his belief that in woman herself la the power to eradicate social evil. Following the paper, a general discus sion ensued, in the course of which Mrs. J. Thompson, an English suffragist, exlained the evolution of militancy, an declared that one evil ught to be removed is the law which takes from nother all legal right to her child after it has become seven years of age.
