

research program was thus to ascertain current levels of understanding and beliefs about the mission, factors and issues driving support and/or opposition to the mission as well as reaction to facts and information both about Afghanistan and the broader international presence in the region. The findings from focus groups provide valuable insights for Government of Canada policy makers and communicators with respect to understanding the extent and nature of critical information gaps as well as the key pressure points for public opinion on this issue.