
LETTER

TO THE

People of England.

LETTER III.

WITHOUT entering into a long Disquisition concerning the Requisites which are necessary to constitute the Idea of LIBERTY in every State, or ascertaining what kind of Government is, in the Nature of it's Conformation, the best adapted for sustaining it when once established; may it not with Truth be said, that whenever Inequity in Laws, and Inequality in distributive Justice are found amongst a People, that then the Exertion and Enjoyment of true Freedom do not perfectly exist in that State.

THAT