The World's Magazine for Women Edited by LAURA E. McCULLY, B.A.

Details of Dress.

A recent article in a leading journal calls attention to the fact that so many well-dressed women depend for their groomed appearance rather on the unconsidered trifles than on the main points, which may easily be secured by anyone with even a moderate income. As every woman knows, the odds and ends never seem reasonable to a man, nor, indeed, to a careless woman, and this fact renders economy in their purchase a real neces-

How to make one really dressy hat do the work of two, and a knockabout preserve its appearance on rainy days—these are problems to all of us.

For the benefit of our readers some considerate firms which advertise occasionally in our columns, have been giving us little professional pointers lately. The first concerns headgear:

The Hat.

If you have a glop left from last year, don't hesitate to utilize it now, for these large shapes are in, and may be made to look very different may be made to look very different from last year's. In the first place, remove the band. Then clean or dye the hat, using gasoline, French chalk, or even flour. Don't have the hat blocked if it be at all heavy. Instead, simply place on the ironing board and thoroly dampen and press the brim. Wire the brim and crown if necessary. sary. Now two effects are possible in the present mode. The "baby" style aims at outlining the face, and is gotten by making two wavy indentations in the brim, on either side the face, so that the hat appears to drop a little at the sides. Bands, when used at all, are not high. The second method is to turn up the brim slightly towards the side, fastening with quills or feathers. Al-satian bows make a pretty trimming

Fashionable Neckwear. A touch of the mannish in the new A touch of the mannish in the new tailored waists makes natty neckwear eminently desirable. Various effects are used. The pump bow matching the suit exactly in color, is very popular, and exceedingly easy to make. Little butterfly bows are also used, and velvet bands worn, the not extensively. Reading outlines the voke of sively. Beading outlines the yoke of many new waists and is threaded with soft silk laces, or velvet ribbon.
Elaborate collars for evening wear are finished with the dog-collar of metal and semi-precious stones. These too are very popular.

The Shoes. Undoubtedly the shoe with the black patent and colored leather upper combination is the dressy shoe for fall. This fact is shown by the number of colored gaiters which are now displayed in the new shades.

Fashion, as usual, has taken a sudden turn about, and long sleeves are in again. Gloves are once more short and possible in price. Suede will be more worn than glace for dressy costumes, and shoes will frequently be of the same material. the same material..
